Britain, Italy Insist France Must Choose Side in Crisis

Two Powers Act to Force Decision on African War, Sanctions.

Eden, Duce Press Paris Showdown

Peace Talks Cited as Only Way to Ease Tension Raised by Demands.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, April 13.—Both Italy and Great Britain, diplomatic sources said tonight, have called on France to choose between them in Italy's conflict with Ethiopia and the League of Nations.

Ambassador Vittorio Cerruti of Italy brought Premier Mussolini's demand to French Premier Albert Sarraut, diplomats said. Britain's declaration, the newspaper Le Matin asserted, was delivered by Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, at Geneva.

"Either you must be with us or with the Italians," the newspaper quoted Eden as telling French Foreign Minister Pierre-Etienne Flandin. But you must choose."

The French press warned Great Britain that any tightening of the sanctions screws on Italy would be likely to lead to war.

Meanwhile, Italian armies, pressing deeper into Ethiopia, seized control of the British sphere of influence in the Lake Tana region, thus adding to the tension of the European situation.

(Informed London sources said the British cabinet at a session tomorrow probably would recommend stronger sanctions if Italy does not enter League peace negotiations sincerely.)

Peace Talks Needed.

Faced with demands from both sides, the only possible way out for France, diplomats stated, would be for Italy and Ethiopia to agree to peace talks when the Committee of Thirteen meets Thursday at Geneva. They said, however, that the French government holds little hope for such an accord.

The British and Italian demands put France squarely face to face with two possibilities:

1. To choose Great Britain, with the obligation to back her to the limit in sanctions against Italy. Such action, diplomats declared, would open the way for a German-Italian accord. Thus two blocs of nations would be formed and a situation would be created which in the past has led to war.

2. To choose Italy, with the obligation of immediately lifting sanctions—thus probably destroying the League of Nations and losing Britain's aid against Germany.

Cerruti conferred with Sarraut late in the afternoon for nearly an hour. The French premier immediately telephoned Flandin at the foreign minister's country home, and then hurried to the Elysee Palace to talk to President Albert Lebrun.

Urged Meeting.

Sarraut, informed persons said, urged that the French cabinet hold a special meeting tomorrow, but Flandin disagreed because he and Sarraut and Joseph Paul-Bouncour, minister without portfolio, already had arranged a long meeting for Wednesday.

Premier Sarraut will address the nation Wednesday night prior to the meeting of the Committee of Thirteen at Gneva.

Officials refused to forecast French policy at Geneva, but it was expected Flandin would oppose strongly any suggestion that force be used to halt the Italian drive in Ethiopia.

Former Premier and Foreign Minister Pierre Laval, whose plan for Ital-Ehhiopian peace—drafted with Sir Samuel Hoare, then British foreign secretary—led to his fall from power, called on the government to lift sanctions against Italy.

In an article which the newspaper Moniteur de Clermont Ferrand will publish tomorrow, Laval called it "paradoxical" for France to demand Italy's help against Germany while continuing to apply sanctions.

"Such a situation," he wrote, "cannot long endure. With sanctions lifted and an honorable and just peace finally concluded with

Border Battle Presages Crisis To Reds, Japan

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Tokyo, April 13.—Tense conditions on the Manchukuo-Siberian frontier, described by neutral observes as approximating a state of war, were tightened further today with a new clash between Japanese and Red troops.

Frontier fighting followed drastic action by the Manchukuo authorities at Hsinking, their capital, in arresting five Mongols holding important posts in the Manchukuo government.

They were charged with conniving with the Russians and supplying vital information to Soviet military intelligence officers.

Japanese Allege Attack.

The high command of Japan's Kwantung or continental army at Hsinking announced that new fighting occurred on the border when a detachment of 40 Soviet soldiers, attached to the Red Far Eastern army, fired on a Japanese detachment of 20 near Hulin, in eastern Manchukuo.

Border fighting between the opposing units continued for half an hour before Japanese reinforcements arrived and forced the Soviet troops to withdraw.

There was no mention of casualties in the official communique.

Lin Sheng was Manchukuo's chief delegate to the Manchuli conference which discussed border disputes between Manchukuo and Outer Mongolia. He is a leading Mongol patriot.

Officials charged that since the Sino-Soviet conflict in western Manchuria in 1929, when he first met Gen. Ostorisoff, commander of Soviet Far East divisions at Hailar, Lin Sheng has been in constant contact with the Russians.

Charge Soviet Aid Promised.

Manchukuo officials asserted Lin Sheng received a promise from the Russians assuring assistance in the Mongols' independence campaign.

Subsequently, he collected official secret information which he conveyed to the Soviet consulate at Hailar, the capital of the Mongol territory incorporated in Manchukuo.

Lin Sheng is accused also of giving Manchukuo secrets to the

Grass in 'Back Yard' Fares Badly Under Feet of Shrieking Children; Roosevelt Makes Brief Speech of Welcome; 114 Are 'Lost.'

By Edward T. Folliard.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt threw open the gates of the White House for the annual Easter egg-rolling yesterday and 48,528 persons—mostly children—strolled through.

They were received in what one youngster called the "back yard," but never were guests more genuinely welcomed, nor hosts more graciously tolerant.

From the south portico of the White House, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt looked out on a scene that would break the heart of a too-sensitive esthete. They saw the famous, rolling lawn smeared with the yellow of smashed eggs. They saw the damp turf uprooted until it looked like the Bowie track on a rainy day. They saw discarded lunch boxes, papers, napkins and other debris—tons of it.

But, looking down, they also saw a myriad of children, happy and shrieking, and that was compensation enough.

The President, flanked by Mrs. Roosevelt and their strapping son, Elliott, waved to the youngsters, and, using language that might be understood in the kindergarten, said:

"I am very glad to see you all here today. I am very glad that this fine custom of egg-rolling on Easter Monday has been kept up. And I am also glad that there are still so many young people in the world."

He waved again, smiled and went inside to continue work on the speech he delivered at a Democratic rally in Baltimore last night.

Thurston Dies Of Pneumonia At Miami Beach

Magician's 'Greatest Trick,' Regaining His Health, Fails Him at 66.

By the Associated Press.

Miami Beach, Fla., April 13.—Howard Thurston, the man who produced living things from nowhere and made them disappear again in thin air, passed through the curtain of death here today.

The 66-year-old magician, who fooled kings and common folk and then became their lifelong friend, died of pneumonia at 1:39 p. m., following a cerebral hemorrhage.

The second Mrs. Thurston, who became his wife years after he changed a box of candy into a white rabbit in her hands on a Chicago theater stage, was with him when he died. His daughter, Jane, who worked as his chief assistant through years of magic on platforms throughout the world, also survives. The first Mrs. Thurston died in 1934.

District Heads Blamed in Lack Of Health Fund

Were Timid Asking More Money, Bell Tells Senate Group.

If appropriations for the Health Department, Gallinger Hospital and other District bureaus and institutions are inadequate, the fault lies with the Commissioners, Budget Director Daniel W. Bell told the Senate sub-committee on District Appropriations yesterday.

In this manner, said Sub-committee Chairman Elmer Thomas, did the Bureau of the Budget disclaim responsibility for conditions arising out of insufficient funds.

The appearance of Bell and three of his aids before the Thomas committee marked the end of its hearings on the District's 1937 supply bill. The measure probably will be "marked up" by tomorrow and may be reported to the Senate by the end of the week.

Bell declined to comment on discussions which took place during the conference, to which he was summoned as a result of charges that conditions—especially nursing personnel and bed space—at Gallinger Municipal Hospital were insufficient due to inadequate operating funds.

Senator Thomas, however, quoted the budget director substantially as follows:

That the Budget Bureau trims the Commissioners' estimates only after searching study, which covers past appropriations and the District heads' justifications for requested increases.

Fail to Stress Need.

That the Commissioners have been timid in pressing for increased appropriations. When the Budget Bureau has made reductions, the Commissioners have made no subsequent attempt to impress upon the bureau the dire need of retaining the item or items which were eliminated, Senator Thomas quoted Bell as saying.

That, in the case of the Federal lump-sum appropriation, the Budget Bureau has approved the sum voted by Congress in the previous year. This year, for example, Bell's office recommended $5,700,000 because that

Air Honeymooners in Hospital, Tell of Hardships After Crash

By the Associated Press.

Ketchikan, Alaska, April 13.—Mr. and Mrs. Albert Almoslino, honeymooning fliers missing a week after their seaplane crashed, told today how vultures soared over the beach where they lay, too weak from injuries and exposure to cry for aid.

The two spent today, the first month's "anniversary" of their wedding, in a hospital, where Dr. S. C. Turner said they were fast recovering.

Both talked of their hardships before they were found yesterday after Pilot Sheldon Simmons located their plane at Princess Bay, 40 miles south of here. It was the eighth day after they left Seattle, en route here. A Coast Guard cutter brought them to Ketchikan.

"After the third day we had to crawl on the beach, we were so weak," Almoslino said. "We couldn't walk.

"When we saw Simmons and his plane yesterday afternoon near the beach, only 300 yards away, we couldn't call for aid. We watched him for 45 minutes, praying he'd sight us."

Simmons, unable to find traces of the pair after he landed and examined the wreckage, flew away, but the cutter Cyane returned to the scene.

Both had badly lacerated feet and were shoeless. Almoslino had his rifle, rescued from his plane, but had not used it in searching for game. The beach would have yielded clams had they dug for them.

Hagood Sent To 6th Corps; Ban Removed

Replaces McCoy May 2; Latter Goes to N. Y.; Nolan to Retire.

Disciplined Officer May Go Into Business; Return Hailed.

Johnson Hagood, bespectacled major general of the United States Army, suspended from active service as result of his criticism of the Administration's spending policy, was restored to good standing yesterday "by order of the Secretary of War." He will command the Sixth Corps Area in Chicago.

General staff officers at the War Department revealed that Secretary Dern had ordered the outspoken officer to take over Sixth Corps headquarters on the edge of Lake Michigan, succeeding Maj. Gen. Frank McCoy. The change is effective May 2.

McCoy, in turn, will go to the Second Corps Area, with headquarters at Governors Island in New York Harbor. He will replace the veteran Dennis Nolan, the Army's senior major general, who becomes 64 years of age on April 22 and thus must retire from active duty by April 30.

Hagood's tour of duty in Chicago will be brief. One of the Army's oldest active officers, he must go on the retired list in June, 1937. Friends stated yesterday that he will be in the new post for only "a brief interlude" before entering private business.

Course Uncertain.

Whether this means that he will take over command of the Sixth Corps Area and then relinquish it in the coming months before he is forced out by law, is speculative.

Officers at the War Department, hesitant to comment, indicated that they felt that as a result of the rebuke Hagood had received from the Administration, he would serve out his year and two months. Hagood, himself, had nothing to say.

He called at the War Department during the day and conferred with Maj. Gen. E. T. Conley, the adjutant general. He did not call on Maj. Gen. Malin Craig, chief of staff. Last night he left for Chicago, where it is understood officials of a mail-order house are anxious to confer with him concerning private employment.

The reinstatement order was hailed on Capitol Hill yesterday by Chairman McSwain, (Democrat), South Carolina, of the House Military Affairs Committee, and Representative Blanton (Democrat), of Texas. They were active in the fight to restore the officer to active duty.

McSwain "Pleased."

"I am pleased that the President has realized that the general is a loyal officer and citizen," McSwain said, "and has shown himself to be a good soldier by taking his punishment in the right spirit. My admiration for Gen. Hagood has increased by the manner in which he took his medicine." McSwain is a close friend of the officer.

"It was only an unintentional breach of technical rules of discipline that did not involve the slightest moral turpitude," McSwain added. "I am sure that Gen. Hagood will act in the future to show how richly he deserves the consideration of the President and the confidence that the whole country expressed in him at the time of his removal from command."

Blanton said:

"This action demonstrates conclusively that my confidence in the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of the United States Army, was not misplaced."

Senator Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, a friend and backer of Gen. Hagood, conferred with the officer yesterday afternoon prior to his departure for Chicago.

Byrnes said it was his understanding that the general would serve as commanding officer in Chicago for only a brief time. Although Gen. Hagood will not be retired for age until next year he has sufficient accumulated leave coming, Byrnes said, to permit him to accept the business offer and then to await automatic retirement rather than to request retirement.

"He has been considering going into business for some time" Byrnes said.

Republicans to Offer Tax Plan Asking Slash in Expenditures

By Robert C. Albright.

Sharp slashing of Federal expenditures, coupled with special excises on imported commodities tending to depress domestic prices, will be offered as a Republican alternative to the Administration's tax program by the Ways and Means committee's minority, it was learned last night.

Clothed in secrecy, and not scheduled for formal announcement until the tax bill is reported to the House, this course of action has been decided upon informally at a series of closed conferences between the committee's seven Republican members.

As another alternative to the proposed dividend-forcing tax on corporate earnings, the group favored an increase in the present corporate income tax to no more than 22½ per cent, it was said. This is in line with testimony of several business witnesses, who said they would prefer a corporate income tax increase to the proposed plan to compel distribution of earnings.

Ways and Means Committee Republicans have directed Representative Frank Crowther, of New York, to prepare their recommendations, which will be filed later as minority views along with the majority's report on the tax bill.

Move to Replace NRA Intimated in Speech at Baltimore.

Federal Step to Cut Work Week Hinted

Garner, Cabinet Attend; Democratic Ovation Greets President.

By Franklyn Waltman.

A Staff Correspondent.

Baltimore, Md., April 13.—Speaking before more than 15,000 cheering Democrats in Maryland's Fifth Regiment Armory, President Roosevelt tonight issued a veiled warning to industry that unless it took steps to reduce unemployment he would be forced to act.

The President did not reveal what he had in mind beyond asserting that "the Government must give, and will give, consideration to such subjects as the length of the working week, the stability of employment on an annual basis, and the payment of at least adequate minimum wages."

"A government doing that is a government that is working actively at the answers to your problem," asserted the President.

Some observers believed that Mr. Roosevelt wished to impress industry with the thought that unless it voluntarily co-operated to shorten the work week and reduce the lag in employment behind production, he would propose a compulsory plan, such as the now defunct NRA.

This view was supported by the fact that immediately preceding his declaration that "Government must give and will give consideration" to working conditions and wages and stability of employment, Mr. Roosevelt cited retrogression in a certain industry in this respect which had taken place since the Supreme Court struck down the NRA.

After pointing out that in this industry the average employment had increased from 36.4 hours per week under NRA to 39.9 hours per week, eliminating the need for 16,650 workers, Mr. Roosevelt asserted that it seems reasonable therefore that industry can contribute in great measure to the increase of employment if industry as a whole will undertake reasonable reductions of hours of work per week while, at the same time, they keep the average individual's payment envelope at least as large as it is today."

Hints Plan for Action.

Whatever the President has in mind as a cure for the severe unemployment problem of the Nation, he gave his audience and the Nation to understand that he proposed to deal affirmatively with the matter—that he could not and would not accept the proposition that even when prosperity is completely restored there would still be a vast permanent army of unemployed.

Although heralded as the opening speech of President Roosevelt's campaign for re-election, his address comprised neither a defense of his Administration nor an assault on his critics. Addressing himself to the youth of the Nation because the Young Democratic Clubs of America sponsored this Jefferson Day rally, the President undertook to arouse hope and optimism in the young men and women unable to find jobs during this depression.

Mr. Roosevelt even glossed over the fact this political rally was in celebration of Thomas Jefferson's birthday. In his prepared manuscript the President referred to Jefferson only as one of the young men in the Revolution. He interpolated, as an addition to that reference, a mention that his birthday was being celebrated tonight.

The President's speech visibly disappointed some of the Democratic leaders in his audience. They had expected a stirring attack on some of the Administration foes—or at least some emphasis on the restoration of economic normalcy.

Applaud Changes.

Instead they received a somewhat philosophical discussion of the problems of youth. The audience indicated what it wanted when it loudly applauded the President when he interpolated the phrase "captains of industry" into a sentence which read in the manuscript: "The best the captains of the country could do for you before the depression was not good enough then, and it is not good enough today."

Blanton Delays Rent Bill Again; Norton Replies

Filibuster Prevents House Action; Texan Given Implied Rebuke.

By James D. Secrest.

Representative Thomas L. Blanton was given an implied rebuke by the House yesterday after he had for the third District day this session prevented a vote on the Ellenbogen rent commission bill.

Almost to a man the members of the House applauded and yelled their approval both when Chairman Mary T. Norton of the House District Committee finally obtained the floor after five Blanton-inspired quorum calls and after she had read a threatening letter sent her by the Texan and her reply.

The applause lasted several minutes after Mrs. Norton returned to her seat, and the genial "lady mayor of Washington" turned and blew kisses to the members.

A few minutes before the House blocked the sixth quorum call by Blanton when Speaker Byrns counted 223 members on the floor. It was then 3.30 p. m. and the House had done nothing but listen to three talks on Thomas Jefferson and answer five roll calls.

Blanton Is Rebuffed.

Coincident with Blanton's setback in the House the Senate subcommittee on District appropriations voted not to hear the acting chairman of the House sub-committee on the pending 1937 District supply bill. Following the outspoken lead of Chairman Glass, of the full committee, the sub-committee decided it did not care to listen to Blanton's arguments for an hour—the time he had requested—and moved to close the hearing.

Blanton's third successive filibuster against the rent bill so aroused House leaders that Majority Leader Bankhead took the floor to make a personal appeal to members to remain on the floor so as to prevent further roll calls.

Condemning by inference the dil-

G. O. P. to Make United Assault On Relief Bill

Fletcher Will Join in Fight; U. S. Aid Imperative, Hopkins Asserts.

By Felix Bruner.

Replacing the limited and disorganized opposition that has marked passage of other New Deal measures in Congress, Republicans in Senate and House, in co-operation with the national chairman of the party, have mapped a united fight on the new relief bill, it was learned last night.

National Chairman Henry P. Fletcher has conferred with the minority Congressional groups in perfecting the opposition, which will center on insistence of the Republicans that the actual administration of relief be left to the States.

Meanwhile, as if answering this contention, Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, in a lengthy report of his activities, declared that Federal assumption of the responsibility for aid to the employable destitute is imperative.

United in the plan to fight the proposed relief bill in its present form are all the minority members of the House Appropriations Committee and Senators Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan; Frederick Steiwer, of Oregon; Warren R. Austin, of Vermont, and Wallace H. White, of Maine. Other G. O. P. House members joining in the fight are Richard B. Wigglesworth, Massachusetts; Clarence J. McLeod, Michigan; Robert L. Bacon, New York; John Tabor, New York; Lloyd Thurston, Iowa; Florence P. Kahn, California; John T. Buckbee, Illinois; Chester C. Bolton, Ohio; William P. Lambertson, Kansas; D. Lane Powers, New Jersey, and J. William Ditter, Pennsylvania.

Cites Evidence of Waste.

"We've had so much evidence of politics and waste in relief," Bacon said, "that the conclusion is inescapable that a huge central bureaucracy, however lily-white Mr. Hopkins' intentions may be, can never keep relief clean. We believe that decent, responsible local administration will do just that, and we're prepared to make a fight on it."

The statement was made as reports were circulated that some Republican members of the House Appropriations Committee were preparing to demand that the WPA be ended and the States be handed the relief problem.

Hopkins issued a voluminous factual report reciting the history of all relief activities under the Roosevelt Administration. He made few comments and recommendations, confining himself largely to a statistical report. He did express the belief, however, that "govern-

Broun, 6 Strike Aids Are Convicted, Fined

Milwaukee, April 13 (AP).—Heywood Broun, New York columnist and president of the American Newspaper Guild, and six other persons arrested in connection with a newspaper strike demonstration March 21, were convicted in District Court today.

Fines of $10 and costs were imposed by Judge George E. Page on Broun, charged with interfering with a police officer, and Alfred Lauterbach, former employe of the Wisconsin News, which is involved in a guild strike, who was charged with disorderly conduct. Others drew fines of $5 and costs.

3 Trapped by Mine Cave-in; Rock Blasted in Rescue Effort

By the Associated Press.

Moose River, N. S., April 13.—Miners working in relays blasted through tons of rock tonight in an attempt to reach three Toronto men trapped 350 feet down in the Moose River gold mine by a cave-in last night.

Hope that the three, two of them owners of the mine, still lived, increased when smoke was seen curling from rock crevices today. Those trapped are R. E. Magill, lawyer, and Dr. D. E. Robertson, owners of the mine, and Alfred Scadding, timekeeper.

Rescue crews believed the three may have gained the shelter of another tunnel before the mass of rock crashed down from the roof of the long disused mine, 75 miles from Halifax.

They hoped the smoke meant the trapped men may have built a fire to keep themselves warm, but admit it may have been caused by subterranean explosions.

F. D. Henderson, aiding in directing rescue efforts, said his men had reached a point believed to be 200 feet from the spot where the men were caught. He added:

"I believe their lamps went out and that they have built a fire for warmth and light. That is what the smoke means. There were some old, empty boxes at that level and it looks to me as if they had broken them up for a fire."

The rescuers hoped to reach the trapped men through an old shaft.

Dr. Robertson arrived Saturday to look over the mine in which he had just purchased a half interest. He entered the workings last night for an inspection trip with Magill and Scadding.

Surface workers got frantic signals from below just 10 seconds before a heavy rumble told of the fall of rock. Miners from Magill, Mooseland and Caribou mines augmented the hastily organized rescue party under Provincial Mines Inspector J. P. Masservey.

Henderson said tonight the rescue workers would not be able to reach the tunnel where the men were trapped until tomorrow, if then

AAA's Cotton Plan Is Scored By Brookings

Survey Charges Program Substituted Boondoggling for Toil.

The three-year experiment in the control of cotton by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, according to a study released last night by the Brookings Institution, has had the following results:

1. An increase in cotton farmers' income during the last three seasons, through price advances attributable to cotton loans and crop reduction.

2. A probability that this gain will be more than offset by losses from expansion of foreign production and decreased foreign consumption of domestic cotton.

3. A decrease in consumption of American cotton, while the program was in effect, due to the Administration's cotton loan policy which, the Brookings report held, was a "serious mistake."

4. Larger crop reductions than otherwise would have been made, due to loaning in excess of the market price.

Boondoggling Replaces Toil.

5. By the fall of 1935, the AAA was financing the holding of nearly twice as much cotton as the Federal Farm Board had financed at its peak, in spite of sharp reductions in cotton production.

6. That there has been no considerable reduction in the status of or displacement of tenant farmers and sharecroppers as a result of cotton control.

7. That what reduction has occurred has been the result of FERA activities rather than of AAA, as the report suggests that high relief wages and high direct relief payments lured families from toil in the cotton fields to boondoggling.

8. That cotton farmers' income increased about $276,000,000 by crop reduction, and about $418,000,000 by benefit payments, but that this gain "is a loan which must be paid off in the future, probably with interest."

The report, sixth and last of a series of commodity studies by the institution, was prepared by Henry I. Richards, under the general supervision of John D. Black, of Harvard University, and Joseph S. Davis, of the Food Research Institute, associated with Edwin G. Nourse, director of the Institute of Economics for the Institution.

Most controversial of the points made in the study appeared to be that concerning the displacement of the sharecroppers and tenant farmers under the AAA. Members of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union and the Sharecroppers Union have disputed such findings before as "whitewashing," while countering with numerous case-histories of "appalling suffering under evictions brought about by crop reduction under the AAA."

Provides Political Fireworks.

This side of the picture is somewhat neglected in the Brooknqs study, which is devoted first to a study of the cotton situation economically before the AAA, the program and its application, and the results achieved.

Political constructions on the report seemed likely with Democrats able to point to the huge increase in cotton farmers' income, and Republicans able to attack some relief activities as unnecessary if the report's conclusion is true that FERA lured croppers to desert cotton labor for the relative comfort of boondoggling.

The report was inconclusive as to the extent of the loss of foreign markets as a result of the AAA cotton operations, stating that this could no be accurately measured, but that conclusive evidence was available that the program had stimulated foreign cotton production during the past three years. While the American cotton price was forced up, the report says, foreign mills heretofore using American cotton turned to foreign cotton.

The cotton loan policy was classed as a "serious mistake," with "political expediency" likely to operate to raise the price by restrictions on marketing and production.

A conclusion was reached that, although the aggregate income of the South had been increased by the program, the economic welfare of a large number of persons "may have been" adversely affected.

Meanwhile the Bureau of Agricultural Economics reported yesterday that during February, farmers sold more than $469,000,000 worth of farm products, compared with $401,000,000 in that month a year ago.

Receipts from crops were reported 17 per cent greater than a year ago and receipts from livestock and livestock products per cent higher. Receipts were reported larger in all States except Kansas, South Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas and Louisiana.

There were no AAA rental and benefit payments in February. Payments during that month last year amounted to $51,671,000.

Long-Feared Demand for Cancellation of Loans by U. S. in Depression Made in House.

By Franklyn Waltman

WHAT many far-seeing persons have feared is beginning to happen — much sooner than they expected. That is the gradual cancellation of many of the loans made by the Federal Government during the depression period — just as cash payment of the soldiers' bonus will be made ten years before its maturity.

WALTMAN

Representative Louis C. Rabaut (Democrat), of Michigan, has introduced a bill which would write off and cancel approximately $20,000,000 in Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans made to counties and cities in 1932 for relief purposes. About 32 borrowers in six States would be relieved of their obligations by the Rabaut measure, which also provides refunds to those cities and counties that have made any principal or interest payments under these loan contracts.

These loans were made by the RFC out of a $300,000,000 relief loan fund before the advent of the Roosevelt Administration, after which Federal money was given to States and their political subdivisions as outright grants. The authorizing legislation provided that States could borrow from the fund by pledging for repayment a part of their annual Federal-aid highway allotment, or by political subdivisions issuing their bonds or other evidences of indebtedness as collateral for the loans. Approximately $280,000,000 was advanced against the highway allotments.

Mr. Rabaut undertakes to justify his measure on the ground that Congress, in 1934, in effect, vitiated the $280,000,000 in loans by providing in the highway grants-in-aid bill of that year that none of the funds so appropriated could be used for any purpose except road and bridge construction. The Michigan Democrat titles his bill as one "to eliminate discrimination."

If his measure is passed, Congress will have established a second precedent in the forgiveness of debt due to the Federal Treasury incurred during the depression. Mr. Rabaut has seized on the first precedent, established two years ago, to justify the second precedent. In another year, a member will appear with a measure to relieve the farmers of some of the indebtedness which they owe the Treasury—and he will cite these two precedents.

Then will come a proposal to cancel or reduce the $400,000,000 or so loaned to the railroads and the relief granted to States and their political subdivisions and to the farmers will be cited as ample precedents justifying such consideration to the financially hard-pressed railroads.

This is not fanciful at all. The action of Congress succumbing to the World War veterans' organizations in paying off the bonus ten years before maturity is evidence of how such things work. Surely, the record in recent years testifies that the farmers as a pressure group are no less ineffective than the veterans. Nor would the home owners to whom the Government has loaned $3,000,000,000 be any less ineffective than the other two groups once they become organized.

Indeed, Senator William E. Borah has not waited for the home owners to become organized and clamorous. Since he is a Presidential aspirant this year, he has gone forth to meet them by introducing a bill which would reduce the rate of interest on loans due the HOLC from 5 per cent, as at present, to not more than 3 per cent.

HOLC officials are aggressively opposed to the Borah proposal. Not only would it reduce their income from interest payments approximately $60,000,000 in the first year and a total of about $536,000,000 over the period of years for which loans have been made, but, they believe, it would have disastrous effect on private lending institutions and upset real estate values generally.

There is little prospect that the Borah proposal will be enacted at this session of Congress —but it shows how the wind is blowing. Undoubtedly the proposal will be revived in subsequent Congresses, with the pressure for its passage annually becoming stronger, and finally it will be passed. Then agitation will start for scaling down the size of the loans.

The only way the Government can successfully avoid such situations whenever it advances its funds as loans is to have the loan made through a third party, a private or quasi-private agency —such as the Federal Land Banks —which will serve as a barrier between the political pressure for relief brought by the borrower and the Federal Government. The failure to devise such a precaution has been one of the greatest defects of the New Deal lending system.

The tendency of Congress to succumb to group pressure for the cancellation of some of the loans made during the depression is an important factor to keep in mind when Treasury spokesmen undertake to offset the increase in the national debt by pointing out the Government's recoverable assets. Some of these assets may be written off by order of Congress long before any recovering is done.

If mortalities in anti-New Deal ranks continue at the rate of recent months, insurance companies may make it a standard practice to ask prospective risks: "Are you in favor of the New Deal?"

James Landis, SEC Chairman, May Quit Post

Considering Returning to Harvard; Burns Also Weighs Resignation.

James M. Landis, chairman of the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission, is considering resigning to return to Harvard University as a professor of legislation, it was learned last night.

Landis, who has been on leave of absence from Harvard, will decide whether to ask another year's leave before June 30, when his present term as head of the S. E. C. expires, it was said.

It is understood Landis would be re-elected chairman should he remian. On the other hand, if he decides to return to Harvard, the supposition is he would continue as a member of the commission until the September opening of the Harvard fall term.

For some weeks reports have been current in Administration circles that not only Landis would resign, but John J. Burns, general counsel of the S. E. C. also would leave. Except for the time of retirement, whether before or after the November elections, it is now said to be definite that Burns will resign, and Landis has been unable as yet to reach a decision.

Helped Draft Bill.

For three years Landis has been active both in the formulation and administration of New Deal policies, first as a member of the Federal Trade Commission, where he helped draft legislation for regulation of the securities markets, and afterward as a member, and later chairman of the S. E. C. He succeeded Joseph P. Kennedy in the latter post on September 23, 1935.

Although Landis himself declined to comment on the reports, it was said in one quarter that he does not consider his present post as permanent, and has considered the courses he might teach should he return to Harvard. Should he extend his Harvard leave from three to four years, it was said, it might mean he intends to retire to private life.

Differences with the Administration are not involved in the case of Landis and Burns. On the other hand, both are expected to be active in the President's campaign for re-election.

Former Boston Judge.

Burns was instrumental in organizing the SEC legal staff in its fight to sustain the validity of the public utilities holding company act; and in court tests of the two security laws. He is a native and a former judge of Boston, and it was learned that he plans to return there to practice law.

Due to the crucial stage of the utility holding company's status in the courts, and the huge turnover in the official personnel of the SEC since its inception, Administration pressure may be exerted on both Landis and Burns to remain.

Ferdinand Pecora resigned as a member of the SEC shortly after its inception, and Chairman Kennedy returned to private life after he considered that he had launched the commission's work well on its course. There have been reports that J. D. Ross, most recent appointee to the commission, will return to Seattle to direct that city's power plant operations.

Landis Born in Tokyo.

Born in Tokyo, Japan, in 1899, the son of Henry M. Landis, a Presbyterian minister, Landis attended Mercersburg Academy and Princeton, and later received a Harvard scholarship. He became a professor of legislation at Harvard, serving as clerk to Supreme Court Justice Louis Brandeis. At Harvard he became a close friend of Prof. Felix Frankfurter, New Deal legal authority.

All details of SEC operation now pass through the hands of Landis and he is said to have personally advanced many of the proposals contained in the recent SEC report to Congress recommending continuance of unlisted departments. Since he became chairman six months ago 10,000 over-the-counter brokers and dealers have come under Federal regulation for the first time, and the first action has been taken against members of the New York Stock Exchange charged with manipulation of security values. During that term much of his time has been taken up with legal complexities of the public utilities holding company act, now in the courts.

R. HENRY NORWEB,

Norweb Is Named Envoy to Bolivia

By the Associated Press.

A Presidential shift in American diplomatic posts in Latin-America resulted yesterday in the elevation to ministerial rank of R. Henry Norweb, of Cleveland, Ohio, one of the State Department's leading "career" men.

He was nominated by President Roosevelt for promotion from his present assignment as counselor of embassy at Mexico City to that of minister to Bolivia.

There he will relieve Fay A. Des Portes, Winnsboro, S. C., who is being transferred as minister to Guatemala to succeed the late Matthew A. Hanna.

Norweb, 42, was born in England of American parents and entered in the diplomatic service in 1916 as secretary to William H. Sharp, of Ohio, then ambassador to France. He held later foreign service posts in Tokyo, The Hague, Santiago, Chile, and in the State Department here.

He was a delegate to the International Radio Conference at The Hague in 1929 and acted as counselor to the American delegation to the seventh international conference of American states at Montevideo in 1933.

President's Ship Models Draw Record Crowds

The Corcoran Art Gallery announced yesterday that President Roosevelt's ship models and sea pictures, now on exhibition, were drawing more people to the gallery than any exhibition the institution has ever held.

Museum officials counted 3,000 spectators in three hours.

The pictures, all sent from the White House, cover the whole range of this country's activities on the sea.

President Roosevelt has sent word he intends to inspect the exhibition himself within a few days.

Veto of Claim For Beer Truck Read in House

Roosevelt Refuses Payment in the Confiscation of Carrier in 1928.

Shades of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution were cast over the House momentarily yesterday when the clerk read a message from President Roosevelt vetoing a claims bill to pay $1,000 to Ellis Duke, also known as Elias Duke, of Washington.

The measure was designed to compensate Duke for the loss of a truck which was confiscated by Federal agents on April 16, 1928, and never returned.

"The truck, containing a quantity of illicit beer, was seized in the possession of three men on a business street in Washington, by Federal agents, who arrested the men," the veto message recalled. "These men and Ellis Duke were charged under section 21, title 11, of the national prohibition act with illegal transportation of intoxicating liquor."

Two of the men found in the truck were convicted, the report added, while Duke and the other made an unsuccessful effort to regain possession of the truck through the courts.

The truck since has been utilized by the Treasury Department and then by the Justice Department after July 1, 1930.

The President concluded the truck was legally seized and that even Duke's acquittal did not give him the right to recover it.

From "Horseless Carriage" -to Motor Miracle with the aid of Instalment Buying

Forty years ago only "Diamond Jim" Brady and a handful of other Americans owned "horseless carriages." Twenty years later cars were still a luxury—and terms were cash.

Then instalment selling was introduced and a great new market opened up. A responsible man with a modest income could pay part cash and the balance out of his monthly earnings.

Both Cash and Credit Buyers Benefit

Motor car sales increased by the millions. Prices dropped by hundreds of dollars per car. And better automobiles appeared. For a fraction of the price which "Diamond Jim" paid for his rattletrap contrivance, you can get a car today with power, comfort and dependability unimagined even ten years ago—whether you pay cash or buy on the C.I.T. Budget Plan. And the automobile industry is now employing, directly or indirectly, one out of every eight of the nation's workers!

Mass production, and mass consumption aided by instalment selling are turning onetime luxuries into everyday conveniences or necessities. Through them new industries spring up, payrolls increase, prices drop and products are improved.

For more than 28 years C.I.T. has taken a leading part in this industrial and social development. Today millions of Americans are proud owners of cars purchased on the C.I.T. Budget Plan; and with its aid countless families are enjoying refrigerators, washing machines, radios, automatic heating equipment and other conveniences which make the home healthier and happier.

Col. Black's Death Declared 'Natural'

New York, April 13 (AP).—Funeral services for Col. Roger Derby Black, retired Army officer and a PWA official, were arranged today after Dr. Thomas A. Gonzales, acting chief medical examiner, had pronounced death due to natural causes.

Col. Black, 53, of Washington, who had been in charge of a Ward's Island sewage disposal project, was found dead in his hotel room yesterday. Police had listed the death as "suspicious."

The widow, son and daughter arranged for private services tomorrow at 2 p. m. at West Point where burial will be made.

New York, April 13 (AP).—Directors of Phillips Petroleum Co. today declared an extra dividend of 25 cents a share and the regular quarterly dividend of 25 cents, both payable June 1, to stock of record May 1.

In the two preceding quarters similar dividends were paid.

Minn. Honeywell Votes 12½c Extra Dividend

New York, April 13 (AP).—Directors of Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co. declared an extra dividend of 12½ cents and the regular quarterly dividend of 37½ cents a share on the common, both payable May 15, to stock of record May 4.

The stock was recently split 3 for 1, priod to which the company paid an extra of 75 cents on February 15 in addition to the regular quarterly of 75 cents.

Supreme Court Denies Death Sentence Appeal

The Supreme Court yesterday dismissed an appeal by Thomas Cole Hart, a convict, from a death sentence imposed for killing Alton Leonard, a Virginia prison guard, according to the Associated Press.

Chief Justice Hughes, announcing the action, said the appeal was "dismissed for want of jurisdiction."

Hart was working in custody of Leonard at the time of the slaying. He contended the killing was in self-defense.

Detectives Hint At New Clews In N. Y. Slaying

Have No Suspects, However, in Bathtub Death of Mrs. Titterton.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 13.—Detectives hinted at new, secret clews to the bathtub slaying of Mrs. Nancy Evans Titterton, but they said tonight they had "no suspect of any kind."

"I won't tell you what I actually have," Inspector Francis J. Kear told reporters after a one-hour conference between 15 commanding officers of plain clothes and uniformed police forces plugging ahead on the three-day-old mystery.

"Just now we have no suspect of any kind. Clews we have, but they lead to no definite suspect."

The conference was held 20 blocks away from the precinct station house controlling the fashionable residential district in the East fifties where the attractive young author was strangled and attacked last Friday.

In Bad Physical Shape.

Kear said that Lewis H. Titterton, her husband, was "in bad physical shape" and that reaction from the strain of grief and police questioning had set in.

Police were concentrating attention on a 13-inch piece of cord found near the bordy. Assistant Chief Inspector John A. Lyons, in charge of the 65 detectives working on the case, it had been definitely established the cord was taken to Beekman Place apartment by the slayer who used it to bind the victim's hands before attacking her and leaving her nude body in a bathtub last Friday.

He said the cord had a "peculiar strand in it" and that detectives were seeking the manufacturer in the hope of finding the purchaser.

Besides the cord, police said, their most promising leads involved two unidentified men who tried to force their way into Beekman place homes recently. Good descriptions of both these men have been obtained.

Watch Funeral Visitors.

On the chance the slayer, believed to be mentally unbalanced, might attend the service, detectives scrutinized visitors at Mrs. Titterton's funeral this afternoon. They were on the lookout especially for the two unidentified suspects.

Titterton stood with the officers at the door of the funeral chapel on Lexington avenue. Among the small group of friends and relatives admitted to the services was Frank W. Evans, of Georgetown, Ohio, Mrs. Titterton's father. About 100 persons stood on the sidewalk outside.

Police said they had no evidence to connect the two unidentified men with the slaying, but they wanted to question them about their strange appearances in the neighborhood.

Tear Gas Is Used In Hosiery Strike

Rockwood, Tenn., April 13 (AP).—Officers hurled tear gas bombs here today to disperse strike sympathizers who sought to prevent several carloads of workers from entering gates of the Rockwood Hosiery Mills, which reopened after being closed a week.

Ford Knox, union leader, said only 51 workers got through the gates.

James Huff, jr., son of the general manager of the mill, said "All departments of the plant are operating with reduced forces."

A crowd of several hundred strikers and sympathizers swarmed around buses and cars carrying workers to the gates. A number of cars were turned back. The tear gas bombs were then thrown to disperse the crowd.

Approximately 300 of the 400 employes of the mills walked out a week ago when officials posted notice that hours were being increased from eight to ten daily with no increase in pay.

Pickets Block Liner From Unloading Cargo

San Pedro, Calif., April 13 (AP).—A picket line of about 200 men prevented the Grace liner Santa Rosa today from unloading freight. The boat docked this morning and 77 passengers from New York disembarked. There was no disturbance.

The Maritime Federation of the Pacific has termed the liner "unfair" in connection with replacing federation members in the deck crew at New York. Grace Line officials said the ship would proceed to San Francisco today without attempting to unload 1,500 tons of cargo consigned to Los Angeles Harbor.

Carmella Ponsella 'Sings Out' Fire Alarm

She saw flames and smoke curling from an apartment window and cried out to another pedestrian, who rang an alarm box.

A fire company quenched the blaze with little damage.

Girl Scout Does Her Good Deed

Easter Egg Rolling

Buckingham Palace and dreamed of what was inside, would have wondered at that spectacle in the White House grounds yesterday.

A small Italian, one who belongs to the "Sons of the Wolf" and drills with a wooden gun, hoping some day to be a Mussolini Black Shirt, would have scoffed at such nonsense.

So, also, no doubt, would a little would-be Storm Trooper in Germany, brought up to believe in more serious things.

The little German boy would have been particularly amazed at the woeful lack of racial discrimination at the Easter egg-rolling.

Romping over the lawn, rolling their varicolored eggs, singing and playing games, were boys and girls whose parents came from all three of those countries. They mingled with other children whose ancestors came from China, Japan, the Philippines and Africa.

Some were dressed in costly woolens and some in shabby calico. Some were there with eggs that had been dyed by uptown caterers, others with baskets donated by Good Samaritans, Inc.

There was one little boy whose grandfather might some day occupy the White House. He was John Knight, jr., 4-year-old son of the former Barbara Vandenberg, whose father, Senator Arthur Vandenberg, of Michigan, is being boomed for the Republican nomination for President.

"Do you like this place?" Johnny was asked.

"Yes."

"Would you like to live here?"

"Yes." He was very emphatic.

So Senator Vandenberg, who has been somewhat coy about the nomination thus far, now probably will be given a push.

The usual "lost battalion" at yesterday's festival was unusually large, a total of 114 children having become separated from their parents.

The cry of "I want my mother!" was heard all over the place, and was a signal for Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and Girl Reserves of the Y. W. C. A. to round up the strays and take them to a hedged-in spot below the portico, there to await the arrival of frantic parents.

But not all those listed as lost really were lost. One little boy, when asked if he knew where his mother was, said:

"Sure, she's gone shopping. She told me to wait here till she got back."

There were still two unclaimed children when the grounds were closed at 5 o'clock. Capt. Clarence Dalrymple, chief of the White House police force, took them into the guard room of the White House, found where they lived, and then gave them the thrill of their lives. He had them sent home in police scout cars.

Many of those lost became separated from their guardians when the President and Mrs. Roosevelt appeared on the porch, others when the Marine Band began its concert at 3:30 o'clock.

One little negro boy, who was rounded up by Girl Reserves, was asked his name.

"Archibald," he said.

"Archibald what?"

"Archibald," he persisted.

But his mother, when she appeared, said that wasn't his name at all. His rescuer, however, said she would always remember him as Archibald.

The "casualties" during the day numbered 25. They were treated by an Emergency Hospital physician in a tent which had been erected by the District Chapter of the Red Cross.

Yesterday's crowd of 48,528 was the second largest on record, the largest having been last year, when more than 51,000 trooped through the gates.

Included in yesterday's throng was a visitor from Canada. He wanted to know who had won the "contest." Told that there was no contest, he wanted to know what was "the point in the thing."

He was told that there was no particular point to it; that the children simply dyed their eggs on Easter Sunday, rolled them on the White House lawn on Easter Monday, and had the time of their lives in so doing. He was told further that one might as well ask why does a dog chase its tail.

Jurors Reopen Inquiry Today In Wendel Case

Former Trenton Attorney Isolated After Report of Prison Threats.

By the Associated Press.

Trenton, N. J., April 13.—Paul H. Wendel, the former Trenton attorney whose repudiated "confession" of the Lindbergh baby kidnap-murder started a two-State investigation, was isolated from other prisoners in Mercer Jail today on the eve of the county grand jury's reopening of the case.

Sheriff Herbert J. Bradley said Wendel, against whom a charge of murdering the Lindbergh baby still is pending, was transferred from the east wing on the first floor to the hospital wing "so he would be where it was more private."

There were reports, denied by officials, that Wendel had been threatened by prisoners because of his reported identification of a former convict as one of four men who detained him in Brooklyn, N. Y., and tortured him into "confessing" the Lindbergh crime.

More Than Score Subpenaed.

The fact that the grand jury has subpenaed more than a score of witnesses for tomorrow and Wednesday was taken as an indication that the new investigation into the Wendel phase of the Bruno Richard Hauptmann case may be more extensive than the inquiry "discontinued" two weeks ago.

The grand jury will not hear Dr. John F. (Jafsie) Condon, Lindbergh ransom intermediary, who was asked by Allyne Freeman, the foreman, to appear Wednesday.

Dr. Condon, who identified Hauptmann as the man to whom he gave $50,000 ransom, sent Freeman a telegram saying in part:

"I know nothing about the Wendel case and am certain my presence would add nothing to the activities in which you are reported to be engaged."

Further Investigation.

It was learned today that some members of the grand jury felt all the points in Wendel's "confession" had not been satisfactorily explained and should be investigated further before a "no bill" is voted, freeing him of the murder charge. His attorneys and representatives of the office of District Attorney W. F. X. Geoghan, of Brooklyn, had hoped the "no bill" would be voted this week so that Wendel could be taken to Brooklyn to search for his "abductors."

Among witnesses summoned to appear tomorrow are Ellis H. Parker, Burlington County detective chief, who obtained a "confession" from Wendel after he was removed to New Jersey; and James S. Kirkham, chief of the Mercer County detectives, who filed the murder complaint against Wendel.

Rebel's Scion Plans Home on Pitcairn's

San Francisco, April 13 (AP).—A young descendant of Fletcher Christian, leader of the mutiny on the Bounty, made preparations today for a trip to the South Seas where he and his mother will claim a portion of famous Pitcairns Island.

He is Charles Christian, 5, a great-great-grandson of the mutiny leader, who established a colony on the island after the mutiny. His mother, Mrs. Edna Christian, will accompany him.

They were notified last year their rights to a portion of the subtropical island had been established and that residents would welcome their presence. Mrs. Christian, in accepting, explained the boy's health was a consideration.

"I am determined to like it," she said. "We expect to stay at least ten years. With a small tract of land and a place of dwelling provided, everything else should be easy."

They plan to sail about May 1 on the steamer-schooner Philatelist, which will carry a scientific expedition to the South Seas.

LaGuardia Is Evasive, Youthful Editor Finds

New York, April 13 (AP).—Bruce (Buster) Hoefer, 11-year-old editor of the Sheboygan (Wis.) Weekly, interviewed Mayor LaGuardia today at city hall and asked some questions which the regular city hall reporters have been wanting to ask for months.

"I asked him, 'Are you going to run for President of the United States?'" said the young editor when he emerged from the interview.

"He answered that he wasn't worrying about it now.

"I asked him about running for another term as mayor and he said, 'I'm not thinking about that either.'

"I asked whether he was a Democrat or a Republican, and he said, 'neither.'

"In fact," Bruce admitted, "I didn't get much out of him."

Woman Calls Prayer in Nude Easter Lesson

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

London, April 13.—A beautiful woman, 25, who yesterday stood nude before the altar of St. Paul's Cathedral while 1,000 worshipers stood stunned during evensong, today told police she had intended to demonstrated to the world the true significance of Easter.

Despite extensive investigation it remains a mystery how the woman, whose name is being kept secret, managed to remove her clothing unseen by any in the congregation.

A cathedral official, describing her mute, naked supplication before the altar, said:

"She murmured something about disarmament and war."

The cathedral verger, who said the nude supplicant has been identified as belonging to a respectable family of Portsmouth, whence she arrived yesterday, said her friends had told him she was most active in disseminating disarmament propaganda.

Examining medical men expressed opinion that she suffered from religious mania.

Police indicated that no action would be taken against the woman. She was held for some time at the Snowhill Police Station after walking to the altar of St. Paul's, slipping a cloak-like coat from her shoulders and standing completely nude before the altar.

The congregation was at evensong. The woman held out her arms in supplication before sinking down on her knees.

As the organ boomed the first notes of the processional, G. W. Henderson, cathedral librarian, dashed up from the chancel, placed the coat around the woman's shoulders and led her gently to the vestry.

Physicians and police who examined her at Snowhill said she seemed dazed.

Paraguay Accepts Bid To Roosevelt Parley

Asuncion, Paraguay, April 13 (AP).—Paraguay accepted President Roosevelt's invitation for a Pan-American peace conference today.

The government made public its acceptance, the final one to be received, which declared the suggestion for the meeting had been adopted "with the utmost sympathy."

Col. Rafael Franco, Provisional President of Paraguay, offered "the best aid of my government for the happy success of such noble initiative."

"Likewise, I am pleased to know that your excellency has named the City of Buenos Aires as the seat of the conference," Franco replied to President Roosevelt.

Youth Shoots Himself, Then Drinks Toast

Staggers Into Restaurant and Collapses From Stomach Wound.

Grieving because his 18-year-old wife had left him with their two infant children, Joseph Higgs, 21, of 912 M street southeast, yesterday shot himself in the abdomen and then went out to toast his death with a bottle of beer.

Higgs collapsed as he was leaving a restaurant after drinking the beverage. His condition last night was said to be critical in Gallinger Hospital after he had been given a blood transfusion.

The young man, an unemployed printer, became deeply despondent Sunday night after his wife, Mrs. Leona Higgs, and their children, Melvin, 15 months, and Morris, 2 months' old, did not return from an Easter visit to her parents.

Mrs. George Higgs, mother of the wounded man, said she had seen her son walk from the house. She stated she had heard no shot, but police found a small-caliber pistol in his room.

Higgs went to a restaurant in the 1000 block in M street southeast. He ordered a bottle of beer from Belgium Borzella, a waiter. Borzella said he noticed Higgs' hand was shaking and that he appeared pale. He asked if anything were wrong.

Borzella said he watched the customer closely and was convinced something was amiss.

"Say," he insisted, "something is the matter. What is it?"

"I just shot myself," Higgs told the waiter.

Borzella went to call an ambulance, but Higgs arose to leave. The young husband collapsed on the sidewalk. Police took him to the hospital. Higgs' wife visited him there yesterday.

Passenger Traffic Up 12% on N. Y. Central

Chicago, April 13 (AP)—Revenue passenger traffic on the New York Central Railroad system increased 12 per cent during the first quarter of 1936 compared with the same period in 1935, D. M. Bowman, passenger traffic manager, reported today.

Reds' Session in Dublin Is Broken Up by Crowd

Dublin, April 13 (AP).—A shouting crowd broke up a Communist meeting in downtown Dublin tonight and then stormed Communist headquarters, smashing windows and furniture.

Gen. Tapia, Former Aid Of Calles, Is Arrested

Mexico City, April 13 (AP).—Gen. Jose Maria Tapia, former ally of former President Plutarco Elias Calles, sent into exile Friday, was arrested by secret police today and other followers of the one-time "strong man" were reported to have gone into hiding to escape capture.

Gen. Tapia, former Governor of Baja California and former chief of staff of the army, was seized by the police as he left his home here. Friends obtained an injunction from the Federal District Court designed to prevent authorities from "killing or exiling" him.

Quarrel Stops Inquiry Session On Army Goods

By the Associated Press.

Sharp criticism by Representative Maverick (Democrat), Texas), of methods used by Chairman McSwain (Democrat), South Carolina, in the House Military Committee's investigation into disposition to Army surplus goods, precipitated a sudden adjournment of yesterday's session.

Maverick asserted McSwain started the investigation without consent of other committee members. Wtinesses, he contended, were not getting "a fair deal" and McSwain was asking leading questions and obtaining opinions instead of facts.

"The gentleman from Texas does not hesitate to express his opinions," said McSwain.

"I reserve the right to express my opinions and I have something to say about the policies of this committee," snapped Maverick.

"It may be impolite for me to say this as a new member of Congress, but I am just as much a member of this committee as you are," he added. "There is not a man in the United States who questions your honesty and integrity, but I believe we have gone into this thing unprepared."

No "Fair Deal."

McSwain said Maverick and other committee members were notified in writing that the inquiry was to be held, but Maverick insisted the members did not "know what it was all about."

Maverick insisted that Lieut. Col. William R. Gruber, who testified last week, did not get "a fair deal."

The clash between the two came during McSwain's questioning of Maj. Gen. G. Van Horn Moseley, former deputy chief of staff and now commander of the Fourth Corps Area.

Moseley substantially corroborated Gruber's testimony that they heard reports in the War Department of plans to divert War Department surpluses intended for charity to private business channels.

Both testified they notified W. Frank James, former ranking Republican member of the committee from Michigan, now employed as committee investigator.

Maverick Agrees.

Representative Rogers (Democrat), of New Hampshire, suggested if James could provide information he should testify—to which Maverick agreed. McSwain said James would be given an opportunity to testify and then requested the committee's permission for James to question Moseley. Representative Merritt (Democrat), of New York, raised a point of order that the House was in session and Maverick moved adjournment of the committee. McSwain banged his gavel and the session was over until today.

The investigation centers around action of the committee in adopting a resolution in February, 1932, authorizing the War Department to sell surplus goods below cost for distribution through the American Legion to the needy and destitute.

The plan originally was submitted to the legion's national rehabilitation committee by Robert J. Byers, officer of the Michigan legion. Byers and George S. Kreiger subsequently were indicted for conspiracy to defraud the Government. They were tried and convicted, but the conviction was reversed.

Woman Gets Stay In N. Y. Vice Case

New York, April 13 (AP).—Mrs. Mae Scheible, convicted proprietor of disorderly houses in Pittsburgh and New York, was at liberty tonight under $10,000 bond continued for ten days to enable her counsel to file an appeal from a four-year penitentiary sentence imposed earlier in the day.

Convicted by a jury last week of violating the Mann act by transporting five girls from Pittsburgh to New York for immoral purposes, Mrs. Scheible was given the prison term and a $5,000 fine by Federal Judge John C. Knox.

Joseph Ryan, erstwhile majordomo of Mrs. Scheible's establishments, who was convicted with her, was sentenced to serve 15 months. The lighter sentence was credited to testimony during the trial that he had been a law-abiding citizen until he fell under Mrs. Scheible's influence.

Police Without Clews As Woman Disappears

Annapolis, Md., April 13 (AP).—Three days of search today had failed to furnish any clews to the disappearance of Mrs. Evelyn Norfolk, 21, who vanished mysteriously while visiting here Saturday.

Oliver Norfolk, her husband, said they came to Annapolis from their home in Harwood, near here. When he parked the car, he said, his wife got out and said she was going to a nearby furniture store. She failed to return.

Hagood Reinstated

cers refused to comment holding that the three-way shift was "routine."

This is the same designation given the now famous "Paragraph 40 of special orders 44," which ordered Hagood to "proceed to his home and await orders."

Following its issuance a storm of protest descended on the War Department. Cries of "Hitler policies" were heard on Capitol Hill. A delegation of Hagood's friends in Congress called on Secretary Dern but failed in their attempt to have the order changed.

A Congressional investigation was proposed, then dropped. When the tempest quieted, President Roosevelt met Hagood March 23 as he journed south for his vacation and discussed the case. Announcement of any action was deferred until yesterday, however.

Hagood's new assignment gives him both a Corps Area and an army, as he had in San Antonio, and command of the Army maneuvers to be held this summer, if he remains.

Gen. McCoy, whose place Gen. Hagood will fill in Chicago, was the war-time commander of the 165th Infanty of the Rainbow Division. Entering the World War as a major, he emerged as a brigadier general in ocmmand of the Sixty-third Infantry Brigade of the Thirty-second Division. He commanded this unit on its march into Germany after the Armistice, being detached for duty at Tours as director general of transportation.

Philippine Inquirer.

On his return to this country he served as a member of the Wood-Forbes special mission of investigation to the Philippines and later was detailed to duty as assistant to Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, the Governor General.

Following the earthquake of 1923 in Japan he headed American relief activities. From July 1, 1928, to January 18, 1929, he was chairman of the Bolivian-Paraguyan Boundary Commission here.

In February, 1932, he was detailed for duty with the League of Nations Commission on Inquiry into the Manchurian situation, which was headed by Lord Lytton.

Among a long list of decorations Gen. McCoy has received are the Croix de Guerre with palm, the Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George and the Distinguished Service Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster. He is 62 and is a native of Pennsylvania.

Gen. Nolan, who leaves the Second Corps Area in New York, came to Washington in 1902 as a member of the general staff. During the World War he was selected by Gen. Pershing to be chief of the American Intelligence Service in France.

He holds a D. S. C. and a D. S. M. as well as a number of foreign decorations. In 1920 he graduated from the Army War College here.

Officer's Savings To Be Investigated

Cleveland, April 13 (AP).—The Cuyahoga County grand jury opened an investigation today to learn how a 3,500 a year precinct police captain deposited a total of $100,000 over a three-year period.

Chief Assistant Prosecutor Charles J. McNamee said this sum represented deposits in several savings and loan companies made by Capt. Louis J. Cadek under four different names from 1929 to 1931.

"I don't know what it's all about," asserted Cadek upon leaving Prosecutor Frank T. Cullitan's office after nearly two hours of questioning. "I have nothing to say at this time."

Supreme Court Agrees to Test Bankrupt Law

Refuses to Review Kidnap Death Penalty Case; Pardon Sought

The Supreme Court yesterday agreed to consider the constitutionality of the municipal bankruptcy act, a New Deal law. Arguments will be heard April 28. The law, intended to aid cities and counties to refund their debts, was challenged by bondholders of a water district in Cameron County, Tex.

The court failed to hand down the awaited ruling on the Guffey coal act, establishing a "little NRA" in the bituminous coal industry. The next date on which decisions will be announced is April 27.

The court refused to review a case in which Arthur Gooch, Southwestern outlaw, was sentenced to death under the Lindbergh kidnaping law. He had attacked constitutionality of the act. Gooch had been convicted of kidnaping a policeman and taking him from Texas to Oklahoma.

No opinions were handed down.

To Appeal to President.

Muskogee, Okla., April 13 (AP).—Arthur Gooch, his last court avenue of escape closed by the Nation's highest tribunal, planned tonight to appeal directly to President Roosevelt to save him from being the first man to hang under the Lindbergh kidnaping law.

Attorneys for Gooch, convicted of abducting two Paris, Tex., officers to escape arrest and taking them across a State line, said they already had prepared forms necessary for the request for executive clemency.

The attorneys, Chal S. Wheeler and W. F. Rampendahl, said a Presidential commutation would be asked on the ground Gooch "should not hang for a purely technical violation."

They said they would contend Gooch did not harm the officers, R. N. Baker and H. R. Marks, abducted in Paris and released in Oklahoma, other than "allegedly scratching one of them on the leg."

Refused Review.

Gooch's final appeal to the United States Supreme Court lost today when the tribunal refused to review his contention that the Lindbergh law is unconstitutional.

Gooch, now in death row at McAlester Penitentiary, said he would not feel the nearness of death "until they lead me onto the scaffold."

"I know they won't let me hang because I didn't hurt anybody," the former Muskogee butcher boy asserted. Ambrose Nix, his companion on the dash from Paris with the two officers, was slain near Okemah December 23, 1933, by Department of Justice agents investigating a double bank robbery at Okemah, Okla.

Brickley Will Be Guest.

Charlie Brickley, former all-American quarterback, of Harvard University, will be guest of honor at the District of Columbia Clemson College Alumni Association dinner meeting tonight at 7 p. m. at the University Club, according to Hugh E. Phillips, president of the alumni association.

Allegany Grand Jury To Study Auto Crashes

Cumberland, Md., April 13 (AP).—The Allegany County grand jury, convening here today, was charged with the duty of investigating the number of automobile accidents in the county.

Judge David A. Robb, in his charge to the jury, said that the number of accidents was increasing, and that the average in Allegany County was higher than in the rest of the State. He also told the jury that enforcement of minor laws should be as strict as the enforcement of major statutes.

Fredericksburg Man Wounded by Policeman

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., April 13.—Andrew Jackson Acrees, of this city, was wounded in the right hip by a bullet from a policeman's gun shortly after noon today, as he was attempting to escape from four officers who sought to arrest him for a 6-month-old alleged offense.

An assault warrant had been standing since November 9, when Acrees reputedly attacked four employes in a local haberdashery store.

Luhring Will Aid In Criminal Court

Seeking to clear up the crowded Criminal Court docket, Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat yesterday assigned Associate Justice Oscar L. Luhring to try criminal cases in conjunction with Justices Daniel W. O'Donoghue and F. Dickinson Letts.

Justice Luhring, who has been on the Criminal Court bench many times before, will assume his new post next Monday, when the Easter recess of the District Supreme Court ends.

Five first degree murder cases, including the Reaguer case, in which a young matron of Culpeper, Va., was slain in a local hotel, and the William A. (Dutch) Kappel case, in which Miss Elizabeth R. Lynch, telephone operator, was murdered are listed for early trial.

Aonther case, and one that is expected to last two months is that of five men charged with conspiring to defraud the Government in connection with the Willacy County, Tex., irrigation project. The men are alleged to have conspired to take $2,500,000 from the Government.

Senate Verdict In Ritter Trial Due Tomorrow

Prosecution and Defense Will Complete Final Arguments Today.

By the Associated Press.

The Senate impeachment trial of Federal Judge Halsted L. Ritter, of Florida yesterday heard a prosecution assertion that the evidence had "convincingly" demonstrated guilt on all counts, and a defense declaration that the jurist had come out of the most "searching" investigation in history an "honorable and upright man."

Four hours, equally divided between opposing counsel, were set aside for closing arguments after rebuttal testimony had been presented before a luncheon recess. A verdict will not be reached before tomorrow.

The Senate will meet but briefly today to complete the final arguments. A recess will be taken at 2 p. m. Some Senators are out of the city and this and the opening American League baseball game today will combine to delay the verdict.

Frank P. Walsh, chief defense counsel, in answering final arguments of Representative Hobbs (Democrat), Alabama, for the prosecution, dwelt primarily on the $5,000 Judge Ritter received from A. L. Rankin, a former law partner, in December, 1929. Ritter contends it was in payment of an "honest debt" for his interest in the dissolved law firm. The prosecution asserts it was a "corrupt" transaction since most of the money came out of a receivership fee Ritter allowed Rankin.

"Sold His Business."

"When he took that money," Walsh shouted into a microphone that carried his voice into the corridors, "Judge Ritter sold his business, or he sold his soul.

"If he did not tell the truth then he has added perjury to what already has blackened his soul."

Hobbs previously had declared the 65-year-old defendant had been proved guilty of all impeachment charges, including granting of excessive fees to Rankin in the Whitehall Hotel receivership, conniving with attorneys to bring the suit, practicing law while on the bench, and evading income taxes.

"These crimes would be heinous," Hobbs asserted, "if committed against one man, but these were committed against the bench, and therefore against all people."

World's Worst Witness.

Walsh, apparently referring to Rankin's repeated "I don't recall" replies to counsel's questions and Ritter's testimony that Rankin didnt pay his debts promptly, brought smiles from Senators when he said:

"Whatever else he did—and I'm not here to praise Rankin—he was the world's worst witness and very slow pay."

Walsh said there was only "one suspicious circumstance" connected with the $5,000 payment—the prosecution charges only $4,500 passed between Rankin and Ritter—and that was that most of it was "taken in cash."

Closing arguments began after the prosecution had inserted in the record, over vigorous defense objections, three letters Ritter wrote in 1930 recommending Rankin, a former Alabaman, for the Federal judgship of the middle district of Alabama. In these letters Rankin was described as an "ardent supporter" of the then President, Herbert Hoover.

One letter went to William D. Mitchell, then Attorney General; another was addressed to Walter H. Newton, then secretary to President Hoover, and a third was sent to Norman J. Morrison, an Assistant Attorney General.

Praised Character.

The letters described Rankin as a man of the "highest character and integrity" and of "exceptional ability." They sought to overcome objections to appointing a then resident of Florida as a judge in another State by explaining Rankin had only temporarily "taken up residence" in Florida and that he had "never fully" given up the idea that he was a citizen of Alabama.

Recalled to the stand, Rankin said he had been "living" in Florida four years at the time he asked Ritter to give him a recommendation, but the question of citizenship was a "very broad" one which, he indicated, he did not want to go into.

Representative Sumners (Democrat), Texas, in arguing for admission of the letters, contended they touched upon the "question of the veracity" of Judge Ritter and the "length to which he was willing to go at the time in behalf of his former partner."

"The introduction of this matter is entirely political," Walsh protested angrily. "It might obscure some elements in this case."

Eastman Plan Is Held Blocked By Rail Labor

Proposal to Consolidate Terminals Regarded as Threats to Jobs.

By the Associated Press.

Amid reports that it definitely has blocked a plan of Joseph B. Eastman to force railroad terminal unifications in 11 cities, organized railway labor yesterday threw its support behind the Wheeler bill to protect employes displaced by co-ordination projects.

Eastman, the Federal transportation co-ordinator, was reported in informed circles to be ready to drop an original move to compel the terminal unifications through the issuance of orders.

Announcing he would issue such orders several months ago, Eastman withheld action at the suggestion of President Roosevelt after the plan had drawn criticism from rail labor.

Office Expires June 16.

Eastman's office will expire June 16 unless extended by Congress, and rail authorities view this as an additional factor working against any move to compel the unifications now.

The bill to protect employes displaced in co-ordinations was introduced after representatives of rail management and labor had become deadlocked in an effort to work out some plan of protection through negotiation.

President Roosevelt had urged that some agreement be reached through conferences and although management and labor spokesmen pledged co-operation they have been unable to reconcile their differences.

Appearing yesterday before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, George M. Harrison, chairman of the Committee of Railway Labor Executives, urged enactment of the Wheeler bill, saying it merely would require the railroads to "share with employes part of the economies which may be realized" through co-ordinations and consolidations.

Would Protect Workers.

The measure would set up a system of dismissal compensation for workers who lost their jobs as a result of unifications and would require the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine whether plans for consolidations carried adequate protection for employes.

Harrison argued that "nothing in this bill will force any carrier to do anything which does not promise an increase in net revenue."

He estimated that if 5,000 possible co-ordination projects were carried out, "at least a quarter million employes" might be displaced.

It was on this same ground that Harrison and other labor leaders opposed Eastman's proposal to force the 11 terminal unifications, arguing that such a move would eliminate scores of jobs and would "throw men out in the street."

Jewish Fund Drive Opens Tomorrow

The 8th WOMAN GETS MORE OUT OF LIFE

Eight million women have had to always consider the time of month in making an engagement — avoiding any strenuous activities on certain days.

Today, a million escape this regular martyrdom because they have accepted the aid of Midol. A tiny tablet, white and tasteless, is the secret of the eighth woman's poise and comfort at this time.

Are you a martyr to regular pain? Must you favor yourself, and save yourself, certain days of every month? Midol might change all this. Might have you your confident self, leading your regular life, free from periodic pain and discomfort.

The smallest degree of relief you might get from Midol means a great deal to your comfort.

Midol is taken any time, preferably just before the expected pain. This precaution often avoids the pain altogether. Yet, Midol is not a narcotic.

Get these tablets in a trim little aluminum case — they are usually right out on the toilet goods counter. Or, a card addressed to Midol, 170 Varick St., New York, brings a trial box in plain wrapper.

Navy Award Medal To McGinnis, Flier

Lieut. Comdr. Knefler McGinnis, crack long-distance pilot of the Navy, yesterday received a Distinguished Flying Cross from Admiral William Standley, Acting Secretary of the Navy.

The citation accompanying the decoration stated:

"For extraordinary achievement while participating in an aerial flight as commanding officer in a record-breaking flight from Norfolk, Va., to San Francisco via the Canal Zone, October 9, 1935.

"This pioneering flight established a new international airline distance record for seaplanes of 3,281 statute miles and a broken line distance record of 3,443 statute miles and has materially enhanced the efficiency and military value of our naval patrol flying boats. It is an outstanding accomplishment and a great credit to Lieut. Comdr. McGinnis and the naval service."

McGinnis now is commanding officer of the Anacostia Air Station. He is 44 years of age and learned to fly in 1920.

G. O. P. to Offer Tax Plan

nue asked in his message, meanwhile, was given by Speaker Joseph W. Byrns. His statement followed disclosure that the House bill may not produce the $799,000,00 originally claimed for it by the committee.

"I think the President is going to insist on having enough revenue," Byrns said.

Coincident with the Byrns statement, reports circulated through the Capitol that the Administration is making another fight to include some $221,000,000 in processing taxes in the program—if not in the House, then in the Senate. Ways and Means Committee Democrats already have voted to leave them out of its bill.

Final Details of Bill.

The Republican course of tax action was framed while Democratic committee members, sitting apart, were threshing out the final details of a bill that probably will appear in printed form for the first time tomorrow.

Minority members determined first to suggest that need for a new tax program might be eliminated by sweeping cuts in Administration spending. If this advice is not followed—and here is no reason to believe that it will be—the Republicans propose next to ask excises on commodities entering this country in sufficient volume to affect domestic prices. Indirectly, the effect would be much the same as a protective tariff on the items affected.

Barring all testimony not bearing on its own sub-committee's tax report, the Ways and Means Committee has refused to hear several witnesses asking such excises, and probabilities are an effort will be made in the House to exclude them as "not germane" to the bill.

The strategy of the Republican proposal lies in its appeal to a considerable number of House Democrats, particularly to the bi-partisan dairy bloc, which was angered at being denied a hearing by the Ways and Means Committee.

Want to Raise Fats Excise.

Dairy members would like to raise the present 3-cent excise on certain imported vegetable fats and oils from 3 cents to 7½ cents, to strengthen butter's competitive position with oleomargerine. They would like also to check Canadian cheese importations by an increase in the existing tax.

The domestic coal industry also is seeking excise tax protection. Representative Patrick Boland (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, proposed to the committee a 1-cent-a-gallon excise tax on fuel oil, which he said would raise more than $150,000,000 in new revenue, but his testimony was held irrelevant to the bill, and was stricken from the committee record.

An increase in the present corporate income tax of 12½ to 15 per cent would be favored by Ways and Means Republican as a last alternative to the Administration's proposal to tax corporate earnings on the basis of dividends withheld from distribution.

Chemists Spin Rayon Strand Finer Than Silk

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, April 13.—A string spanning the United States from New York to San Francisco would unroll from a single 1-pound ball of new rayon dress goods fiber described to the American Chemical Society here today.

With this artificial stuff, man for the first time has definitely outdone Nature in fineness of diameter. The new fiber is about one-third thinner than finest silk, and would unwind to a length of 2,500 miles per pound, compared with 1,000 miles a pound for rayons previously developed.

Several manufacturers have perfected the new weave simultaneously. All the processes were described in general report on chemistry's progress toward improving artificial dress goods presented by Dr. Ernest B. Benger, general assistant director of the chemical department of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.

School System Scored.

A strong indictment of the Nation's high school educational system, including instruction by teachers without training in their own subjects, was approved today by the society.

A majority of the country's noted college professors are made ineligible to teach high school classes, even if they chose, by State monopolies of the educational "machinery," the society was informed in an exhaustive report by its committee on high school teaching of chemistry.

The committee, headed by Ross Aiken Gortner, of the University of Minnesota, found that high school graduates of the past ten years are woefully deficient in mathematical knowledge, with the situation "tending, if possible, toward a worse condition."

A 28-year-old assistant professor at Cornell, acknowledged to have outstripped some of the world's best minds of any age in molecular chemistry research, was awarded the $1,000 Langmuir prize for 1936 by the society today.

Author of 16 Papers.

Author since his twenty-second birthday of 16 highly valuable papers, the professor, John Gamble Kirkwood, was lauded as having "succeeded in instances where older and more experienced men of proved ability have failed to arrive at definite results."

Kirkwood, a native of Gotebo, Okla., has contributed considerably to the theory of compressed gases and mixtures of gases.

New Routes Urged For Transit Lines

Rerouting of the Hyattsville, Potomac Heights and Montgomery County bus lines through the downtown section, was proposed to the Capital Transit Co. by the Public Utilities Commission yesterday.

Riley E. Elgen, commission chairman, said the changes were suggested for study by the company as a means of relieving congestion.

The Hyattsville line runs from Rhode Island avenue south on Tenth street to Pennsylvania avenue to Eighth, to E, to Tenth, to Rhode Island avenue. The Potomac Heights and Montgomery County lines run over the same route from K street. The new routing would have the buses turn from Rhode Island avenue on K at Ninth street, thence to Pennsylvania to Seventh to Constitution to Ninth and over regular routes.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief Of Pain

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are one of Nature's chief ways of taking the acids and waste out of the blood. If they don't pass 3 pints a day and so get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter, your 15 miles of kidney tubes may need flushing.

If you have trouble with frequent bladder passages with scanty amount which often smart and burn, the 15 miles of kidney tubes may need flushing out. This danger signal may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait for serious trouble. Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills—which have been used successfully for over 40 years by millions of people. They give happy relief and will help flush out the 15 miles of kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills.

Italians Seize Source of Nile; Dessye Taken

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Rome, April 13.—The Italo-Ethiopian war again hurtled into first place as the major international crisis today when conquering Italian armies seized control of Great Britain's sphere of influence in Ethiopia.

Italian triumphs in East Africa coincided with new truculence in Rome threatening to thwart latest League of Nations peace efforts.

Outstanding developments included:

1. Premier Benito Mussolini's official newspapers printed thinly veiled warnings that Italy will retract her agreement to discuss Italo-Ethiopian conciliation with the League's Committee of Thirteen if "the present atmosphere of intimidation continues."

2. Italian advance columns moved in to dominate the Lake Tana area. The lake is vital to Britain because it feeds the Blue Nile, which waters the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and large portions of Egypt. Beginning a movement to encircle the lake, Black Shirt forces occupied the Gorgora Peninsula, jutting far into the water.

Dessye Occupied.

3. An Italian motorized column reportedly occupied Dessye, former field headquarters of Emperor Haile Selassie. There was no resistance. It was rumored in diplomatic quarters that Il Duce has ordered Marshal Pietro Badoglio to advance on Addis Ababa, which many Italians believe will fall within two or three weeks.

4. Diplomatic quarters in Rome learned that Mussolini hopes to force Haile Selassie to abdicate within a fortnight. Should he refuse, the Italians would occupy Addis Ababa and after deposing the Emperor establish a puppet government with his son, the Duke of Harrar, as ruler.

5. Italian troops moved to the Sudanese frontier, occupying the Ethiopian customs post at Gallabat, whence two major caravan routes into Ethiopia are controlled.

Badoglio's latest war communique said:

"The victorious advance of our troops is continuing throughout various sectors on the northern front.

"Our columns departing from Gondar yesterday occupied the peninsula of Gorgora in Lake Tana, hoisting the tricolor. Our troops were joyously welcomed by the population.

Connected by Road.

"Lake Tana has been connected with Gondar by a motor road constructed during the advance of the troops. Another column, composed of motorized units, camels and 'scooter' tanks occupied the Ethiopian customs post in front of Gallabat and west of Gondar.

"Armed enemy groups are fleeing before our advance. On the southern front a small detachment of the Aosta Lancers, while reconnoitering, contacted superior numbers of the enemy forces in the vicinity of Wadara. They engaged the enemy in a fierce encounter, compelling them to retreat.

"Our losses were 46 nationals dead and wounded. Enemy losses were considerable."

While Italians rejoiced over military victories in east Africa the government received an invitation to participate in the general staff conversations to be conducted by Locarno Treaty signatories—Great Britain, France, Belgium and Italy. If Italy accepts the invitation, she will maintain a policy of reserve.

Mussolini designated Baron Pompeo Aloisi, his chief delegate to the League of Nations, to represent Italy in conversations with Salvador de Madariaga, chairman of the Committee of Thirteen which is attempting to negotiate peace between Italy and Ethiopia.

Aloisi will return to Geneva before Thursday's meeting of the Committee of Thirteen—the League Council minus Italy.

'Happy Christmas' Is Pastor's Greeting

Richmond, Va., April 13 (AP).—The Easter Sunday congregation looked startled when the pastor wished them "Happy Christmas."

"I wish you this," he explained, "because there is a large group of you whom I never see any nearer to Christmas."

Another prominent Richmond pastor termed part of his listeners his "Easter lilies," but said he welcomed them to service "even though they came only on Easter."

Ethiopia, we shall be able, with more confidence, to plot the destiny of Europe and to organize peace."

Parley to Open.

Geneva, April 13 (AP).—A critical period in the African war opens tomorrow when the League of Nations launches its long-pending negotiations to bring peace between Italy and Ethiopia.

Within the next 48 hours the League expects Premier Mussolini to show his hand and say definitely on what terms he will make peace.

League circles forecast these terms would be harsh. In some quarters belief was expressed they would be so demanding the League could have nothing to do with them.

In this crisis, linked with the greater Rhineland crisis, which already has created something of a chasm between Great Britain and France, one man refuses to lose his optimism.

He is Salvador de Mararíaga, appointed by the League to handle peace negotiations between the two warring nations.

The diplomat, also well known as a poet, expressed confidence tonight that the League would emerge triumphant.

Plan Awaited.

"I hope and expect that Italy's representative will bring to Geneva a definite plan for peace," he told the Associated Press.

Premier Mussolini's representative, Baron Pompeo Aloisi, will not reach Geneva before Wednesday, but will give De Madariaga 24 hours to get his peace parleys started. He expects to confer tomorrow with Wolde Mariam, the Ethiopian delegate.

Mr. Augusto Vasconcellos, of Portugal, chairman of the League's Committee of Thirteen, let it be known that if Il Duce's terms proved hopeless from the League's standpoint he would convoke a meeting of the sanctions committee Friday to discuss the situation.

If Great Britain recommends more drastic sanctions against Italy League circles forecast that France would vigorously oppose such a step.

Border Battle Presages Crisis To Reds, Japan

Soviet delegates at the Manchuli conference.

The arrested governor and his colleagues will be tried by court-martial. Manchukuo authorities insist that the information he conveyed to the Red commander was largely responsible for recent border clashes between oSviet and Japanese troops.

Moscow, April 13 (U.P.).—While new Far East frontier clashes further strained Soviet-Japanese relations today, Alexander Kosarev delivered a warlike speech before the all-union congress of the Communist youth organiztaion.

"Communist youths are ready to volunteer for the Red army," he thundered in the feature address of the congress.

"Neither the bravery of the Samurai nor the strength of bandits in brown shirts with swastika on their arms can save them from the fate inevitable for those who dare attack us.

"In case of attack our planes and tanks, plus the interference of German, Japanese and Polish workers, would give us complete victory."

The Communist youth organization—the Comsomol—claims a membership of 3,592,962 including 990,000 riflemen, 21,000 sharpshooters, 21,000 qualified parachute jumpers and 3,500 reserve airplane pilots.

Japan Makes Preparations.

Kalgan, Inner Mongolia, April 13 (AP).—The Japanese army, apparently disregarding the nominal Chinese sovereignty in Inner Mongolia, has installed modern military equipment at strategic points, informed sources said today.

This equipment includes landing fields and wireless stations.

The Japanese have taken necessary measures to insure absolute control of the 400-mile high road from Kalgan to Outer Mongolia. In the event of war between Outer Mongolia and Manchukuo, involving their respective sponsors, Russia and Japan, this road might become a main avenue of Japanese attack.

This strategically located provincial capital is at the junction of the Peiping-Suiyuan Railway and is on the most important caravan route to Ulan Bator (Urga), capital of Outer Mongolia.

Caravan traffic between Kalgan and Ulan Bator, which amounted to $4,000,000 last year, is completely suspended while border restrictions are tightened.

Relatives Fight Will Of Chinatown 'Angel'

Oakland, Calif., April 13 (AP).—Illinois relatives of Ella May Clemmons, called "Christ's Angel" during a picturesque career in San Francisco's Chinatown, today filed suit to break her will and block inheritance of her $50,000 estate by Dr. Hjalmal Groneman, charged with manslaughter in her death.

Miss Clemmons' money came from her sister, the late Katherine Gould, who married the son of Jay Gould, of New York. The aged woman married Dr. Groneman, San Francisco chiropractor, 9 days before her death here.

Those suing to break the will charge Groneman with conspiring with an unidentified man and woman to persuade Miss Clemmons to make him beneficiary of her estate. They allege that Groneman was consorting with another woman at the time he was pretending to be in love with her, and declare the will never was signed.

Chinese Envoy Calls for World Peace Meeting

Sze Tells Penwomen Whole Political Rights of Nations Must Be Considered.

A world conference "to reconsider existing political rights and obligations" of nations was urged by Chinese Ambassador Alfed Sze in a talk before the National League of Pen Women at their authors' breakfast yesterday noon in the ballroom of the Willard Hotel.

The breakfast, presided over by Victoria F. Stevenson, president of the league, was a featured event of the biennial conventions of the league.

"It is now generally recognized that, in order that a firm basis for a satisfactory international situation in the West may be secured, it will be necessary to reconsider the whole complexus of existing political rights and obligations," said the ambassador.

"In the Far East equally fundamental changes must take place. The situation in the East is too closely related to that in the West to allow it to be ignored, or even to be dealt with separately. If a conference is to be held for the establishment of a new and better international order, it must be a world conference."

The ambassador praised the treaties signed at the Washington Arms Conference in 1921 for improving the Far Eastern situation, but criticized the Japanese for breaking those treaties by invading Manchuria.

Other speakers were Frederick Lambeck, author; Mrs. Ada Dwyer Russell, literary executrix of the poet, Amy Lowell; Frank A. Tichenor, publisher; R. D. W. Connor, of the National Archivist and Mrs. Roberta Lawson, president of the National Federation of Women's Clubs.

At noon today a "poets'" luncheon will be held in the Fairfax room of the Willard. Harold Vinal, editor of Voices, will be guest of honor. Mrs. Lucille McMillen, of Chevy Chase, a member of the United States Civil Service Commission, will read several prize poems.

Adventist Heads Honored by 1,000

Nearly 1,000 persons last night attended a meeting at Washington Sanitarium honoring two officials of the General Conference of Seventh-Day Adventists, who are retiring from the church.

The farewell party was given for the Rev. C. H. Watson, president, and the Rev. J. L. Shaw, treasurer of the conference, who are leaving for the West next week, where they will resign at the church convention in San Francisco, May 26.

Vice President I. H. Evans delivered a short farewell address. M. E. Kern, secretary of the general conference, and W. E. Howell, secretary to President Watson, were in charge of the affair. The retiring officers were presented with gifts.

In the receiving line were representatives of the organizations which sponsored the party. They were the Rev. Walter P. Elliott, Review and Herald Publishing Association; the Rev. C. S. Longacre, pastor of the Takoma Park Seventh-Day Adventist Church; Prof. H. A. Morrison, president of the Washington Missionary College, and C. C. Pulver, business manager of the Washington Sanitarium.

Not For The Medal Alone.

When Lincoln Ellsworth stands before the members of the National Geographic Society here tomorrow night and tells of his expedition to Antarctica, he will depict a vivid chapter in the life of an intrepid adventurer. During this visit to Washington he is to receive the award of the Hubbard gold medal—the society's highest honor—and thus join a fraternity including Byrd, Amundsen, Stefansson, Andrews and Lindbergh. All are noted not merely for exploratory efforts but even more for the important scientific results which have sprung therefrom.

With a single companion, Ellsworth was recently lost for nearly two months in the polar regions. The ordeal of waiting, waiting, waiting in a tiny improvised shelter, for a rescue which might never come in that vast expanse of ice, alone should merit some medal of distinction. Yet the iron nerve and the fatalistic philosophy of the veteran gambler with nature in her most truculent mood were evident when the explorers were picked up. Their casual attitude appealed to the public's appreciation of the dramatic, the calmness under danger, the smile and challenge at a swinging scythe.

President Roosevelt has gladly agreed to present the medal to Ellsworth and the occasion would thus seem to represent the full fruition of ambition for the explorer. Yet men of his vitality and zeal and daring never really achieve what they seek. They keep on trying, amid ice floes, deserts or fantastic peaks which symbolize the difficulties of man's struggle with his destiny. And something more potent than medals keeps them striving, both men like Ellsworth and others not so distinguished in the public eye.

Time For Play.

Though Bitsy Grant was pushed to one 13-11 contest, the United States came smoothly through its first-round Davis Cup matches, losing only one set to Mexico. Next month, with the Australians coming to Philadelphia, it will not be quite such plain sailing. They grow big in the "down under" part of the world, and if it isn't a Gerald Patterson or a Pat Wood, it's a Jack Crawford. More than that, they're a clever lot: when Vivian McGrath can't get enough speed into a backhand drive, he takes two hands to his racquet.

So, with baseball opening up today, the winter must really be over. It's a pleasant prospect. Boston, Chicago, New York and all the rest will forget unemployment figures, blizzards and local political problems at least long enough to examine the new pitching material and to size up pennant chances. And perhaps even Italy, Germany, Japan and all the unrest will look away for a moment from their military camps to consider white flannels and smashing lobs. And a welcome respite it would be for their citizens. Are you ready? Play ball!

The Scholar In Politics.

American public life has seen many men whose intellectual interests range far into fields remote from those required by their careers. Such men are apt to insist upon the exacting criteria of scholarship in even the details of their daily work, and to throw the influence of their broad cultural background upon all the matters which they have in hand. The type, however, is tending to become more rare. Whether conservative, liberal or radical, too few real scholars are to be found nowadays in the camps of politicians. High among those few stood James M. Beck.

He was strongly conservative, yet he wore his conservatism with a grace which disarmed many of his opponents. He argued for the Constitution as its makers made it rather than as reformers would have it interpreted. He was, all his later life, a confirmed partisan. Yet he differed with his party—notably when as a Philadelphia representative he voted against the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill—at any time that his intelligence prompted an attitude of opposition. In other words, Mr. Beck was a traditionalist who accepted tradition only up to the point that its validity impressed his intellect.

At large, Mr. Beck will be remembered as a very able Solicitor-General; a distinguished constitutional lawyer; a brilliant orator, and as a Congressman jealous of the best traditions of representative government. His many personal friends knew him additionally as a student of history who could apply the lessons of yesterday to the news of today; as an expert on Shakespearean drama who could quote Gilbert and Sullivan with gusto; as a profound lawyer who was also a kindly and courteous humanist.

Those are among the reasons why his death leaves a void in American public life, recognized even by men who found their opinions on national problems strongly at variance with those so trenchantly voiced by James M. Beck.

Pan-American Day.

Pan-American Day has never had so much significance as is the case today. In previous years its commemoration has been clouded by some untoward circumstance—our interventionist activities in the Caribbean, the war in the Gran Chaco, or some other fly in the ointment of inter-American fraternity. This year it finds the continent without war or threat of war. Throughout its length there is no Ethiopia or Rhineland or Outer Mongolia. No people calls another "enemy." Here is an object lesson to the rest of a contentious and harried world.

The growth of Pan-Americanism to its present stature has been slow and halting. On our side it has had to contend with the national impulse for territorial expansion. The movement has been delayed by "manifest destiny," "dollar diplomacy," a unilateral Monroe Doctrine and the irritating assumption that we are a highly superior people.

South of the Rio Grande, Pan-Americanism has been impeded by local quarrels and jealousies between the different Latin republics, by the pressure of internal political and economic problems, and by a hypersensitive and distrustful attitude toward the United States even when our overtures were manifestly sincere. On both sides differences in racial psychology and ignorance of one another's historical background and present ways of life have militated against the mutual understanding that is the crux of Pan-Americanism.

The fact that all the American republics have made progress toward the elimination of obstacles to international good will is responsible for the highly satisfactory status of Pan-Americanism today. We are better acquainted with each other than ever before and are becoming more appreciative of the reciprocal value of one another's racial cultures. Americans are now interested in our relations with Latin-America for much more than merely commercial reasons.

Hitherto "foreign affairs" have generally had a horizontal connotation to most of us. They have run along east and west lines and we have considered only the doings of Europe and Asia as worthy of our attention. Thus, Latin America has appeared an unimportant side show in the gaudy spectacle of world politics. Of late our interest as a people has shifted increasingly to the south. There has developed a growing realization of our community of interests with the rest of the Western Hemisphere, and a better understanding of the importance of the nations which are there rapidly growing to an imposing maturity.

No single factor has done more to promote true Pan-Americanism in recent years than the far-sighted attitude of the present Administration. Its Latin-American policy is at once definite, consistent and intelligent, in contrast to the lack of a clearly formulated policy for the rest of our overseas relations.

Of late we have proffered friendship to the rest of the Americas without reservation, backing our words with deeds. We have abandoned of our own volition the last vestiges of special privilege which we had assumed in Latin America. We have undone our interventions and our last protectorates in exchange for a genuine partnership in the peace and welfare of the continent. Under this changed policy our actions at last fully square with our protestations. The patronizing tone has gone from our dealings, and, as Mr. W. L. Schurz pointed out in his article in The Post on Sunday, a becoming humility from our own troubles has made us a better neighbor to our fellow republics.

But the real task of Pan-Americanism is only well begun. The late conflict in the Gran Chaco, which got out of bounds before measures could be taken to mediate the controversy, shows its imperfections. The outstanding need is the establishment of an effective technique of arbitration or conciliation that will quickly and firmly prevent resort to war between its members. The suggestion of President Roosevelt for a special conference to deal with this vital problem is a recognition of the urgency of such a machinery. A similar recognition is apparent in the replies from the presidents of a number of other American republics, as made public by the Department of State yesterday.

Pan-American Day this year sees a most encouraging preliminary response to a movement carefully designed to promote peace in the Western Hemisphere without in any way jeopardizing machinery designed to make its world-wide preservation more effective.

Change The System.

After months of experimentation, with virtually no limitations on expenditure or authority, the work-relief system is revealed as a colossal and tragic failure. At the end of a year of pronounced and almost uninterrupted business improvement, during which the Federal Government has spent several billions of dollars in creating jobs, estimates of numbers unemployed show little or no decline. In New York City alone, 85,000 more people are on doles or work-relief than were being supported a year ago. Moreover, since the establishment of the WPA last August, there has been an increase of approximately 50 per cent in that city's monthly relief outlays.

The executive director of New York City's emergency relief bureau frankly admits that many persons previously supported by relatives and friends rushed to qualify for WPA jobs by going on relief. This is eloquent testimony to the success of Administrator Hopkins' efforts to make work-relief jobs acceptable to self-respecting individuals. But the very attractiveness of these jobs reveals one of the inherent and fatal defects of the present system. As the record shows, this method of relieving destitution has simply increased the burden loaded upon the Federal Government without forwarding any long-range solution of the problem.

If there were evidence that permanent jobs in private industry would multiply as a result of WPA activities, there might be some justification for continuing the effort to boondoggle the country into a solution of the unemployment problem. At least we could endure more philosophically the political abuses, the extravagance and the undermining of local self-government that are incidental evils of present methods. But we certainly cannot afford to finance an experiment that costs billions while making no dent in the volume of unemployment. Despite the optimism of Administrator Hopkins regarding the immediate outlook, there is every reason to expect that another year of the WPA would find us still deeper in debt, with relief needs as pressing as ever.

It is useless to talk about reforming the WPA. Because of its utterly fallacious approach to the problem of unemployment, the Republican members of the House Appropriations Committee are justified in demanding the abolition of this discredited system and a return to less expensive methods of relief. Our financial position makes it imperative to cut costs by eliminating boondoggling, and by turning back a large measure of responsibility for the administration of relief to the States and localities, where it rightly belongs. That would necessitate transferring some WPA jobholders to direct relief unless or until work can be found for them. In other cases, however, it would be possible to continue many relief applicants on definitely useful work.

The savings resulting from abolition of the WPA would release funds for financing long-range public works that meet a real need. Projects such as those recommended after careful study by the National Resources Committee might not provide much direct employment. But they would stimulate demand for the output of the heavy industries and thus indirectly provide new employment openings. This type of work cannot be carried on by an organization that aims to provide temporary jobs on the basis of need, regardless of the training or skill of those employed.

Before acting upon the relief budget, therefore, Congress should soberly review the fundamental mistakes of policy that have characterized the relief system, and lay the foundation for a constructive approach which in any event will sooner or later be inevitable. The task is not impossible if we make use of existing facilities for dealing with it. One obvious step is to register all employables on relief with offices of the United States Employment Service, making a definite test of willingness to work, on private or public undertakings, a condition precedent to relief payments. Such a step, incidentally, is the only scientific way to obtain a census of the unemployed.

A recent survey shows that college professors know very little outside their own special subjects. This finding supports the theory long held by many that the only bird around a college who knows everything is the freshman.

"Anyone should know that only a fool is certain about anything!" declares an educator who seems to be certain about this.

A Japanese View Of China.

Viscount Ishii in His Diplomatic Commentaries.

If China be devastated by calamities of Nature, if epidemics break out in China and the dead lie unburied in the streets, if civil war become the scheme of life in China, if China develops into a hotbed of Bolshevism, the existence of European and American states is not directly imperiled. This is not so in Japan's case, however, as she cannot continue her existence without China, and as the Japanese people cannot stand alone without the Chinese. Whether it be civil war, or epidemics, or political heresies which afflict China, the contagion will spread to Japan, and the Japanese will suffer as well.

These considerations are what lie at the bottom of Japan's extraordinary interest in China and make China of such vital concern to her Whether Japan likes this situation or not, it is one which Heaven and Nature have ordained for her and from which she cannot escape. . .

In the same proportion as Japan's interests in China are incomparably wider and more vital than those of other nations, so should her responsibility and voice in matters pertaining to China be immeasurably greater. This is what is meant by Japan's special interests in China.

The Ideal Juvenile Court.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am much interested in the proposed Juvenile Court law for the District of Columbia. I am familiar with the provisions of the standard law upon which your bill is passed and heartily indorse the procedure as outlined therein.

The problem of procedure, as I understand it, is to put into administrative effect the ideals of a juvenile court regarding the child not as a criminal or as on trial as a defendant, but rather as one still in the formative period of life who may, by wise counsel and guidance, be saved from a career of crime. The emphasis is decidedly preventative, society protecting both itself and the child whenever the parents acting alone are unable or unwilling to cope with the situation.

The powers of the judge must be large enough to enable him to work out the problems of the child for the child's best interest and that of society. Should the judge in a particular case not use sound discretion, such error may be corrected on appeal.

I do not think it wise to present any barriers to the appearance of attorneys in proceedings involving children, but rather to enlist their services as officers of the court, whenever they do appear, in order that they me be helpful in arriving at happy solutions.

In general, one of the decided advantages of the procedure under the standard law is to encourage on the part of the judge and others a thoughtful, well-rounded approach to the child's needs, suiting the action in each case to the particular child, somewhat like a doctor does in treating his patients.

"Evidence Of Progress."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Permit me to felicitate you upon the excellent literary page and book review section in your Sunday issues. The reviews are free, unbiased and illuminating. After one has finished reading a review, he has a clear conception of the book's contents and attitude of the author. Karl Schriftgiesser, Granville Hicks, and John Rodgers show particular acumen.

It is an evidence of progress when a large metropolitan paper like The Post will reprint from a magazine like the New Masses. Such a policy inspires confidence in the readers of The Post that no school of thought is being slighted no matter how unpopular it is supposed to be. Granville Hick's article, "Culture's Menace," was excellent.

There is a particular scarcity of real critics today and I believe that The Post is paving the way to develop new ones.

Two Parties.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The "peace at any price" advocates have apparently overlooked the fact that while it takes two to make a quarrel, it also takes two to keep the peace.

They declare that they would never go outside the United States to fight. Does that mean that they would be content for a foreign nation to repeatedly send bombing planes and battleships against our coast cities and to wipe our shipping from the seas, with complete safety to itself, while we sat at home and "took it?"

If that is what they mean, I do not think they will find many Americans to agree with them.

Bargain Tours.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: According to reports, Mussolini is offering a premium of about 100 cents on the dollar to tourists who come to his country and spend their money. Evidently he needs our money very badly, but we cannot share it with him without sanctioning his brutal and cowardly war on Ethiopia.

Americans have but to restrain their impulse to get a trip through Italy at bargain counter rates, to prove that they know the cause of, and mean to cure war, and cannot be bribed into condoning or assisting to finance war.

Supporting "Vet Bureau."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I say a word in defense of "Vet Bureau," whose points seemed sound to me?

One reader-knocker admits himself too choosy to live in Maryland, unaware good homes under $5,000 went begging here for two years. I know; I looked at many and bought one. But the reader seems to want his problems solved by Uncle Sam, without vulgar personal effort, except signing a larger pay check. He forgets 12 millions in the gutter; blinded possibly by vision of 130,000 cars on the street here.

Claude Babcock should re-read his own treatise. It was by judicious investment that "Vet Bureau" set out to augment his income. What sort of people inhabit Washington that so contemptuously condemn sane financial planning?

Government clerks are lucky to hold jobs, the more if they've held them through the big flop. Why blink that fact? They're lucky even if they haven't made all ends meet. Some are culpable in that they won't try, but squawk for higher wages before the world's ace depression had unwound itself and while Government is still deep in the red. I. H. LATIMER.

Another Parking Question.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read with much interest and unstinted approval of your campaign exposing the practice of parking lot owners of removing cars from their parking lots, parking them upon the streets and then returning them to the lot before they are called for by the customer. I believe, however, that there is another situation which probably would not bear investigation, with respect to parking lot proprietors a little removed from the strictly downtown area. I can speak with knowledge only from the situation existing in northwest section of the city.

Either on or abutting on this area there have been recently opened for business not less than three new parking lots. All of the area above mentioned is subject to a two-hour parking restriction, but apparently this was not sufficient for the operators of these parking lots. It seems significant to me that within the last few weeks, and immediately following the opening for business of these three new parking lots, the surrounding areas have been closed to parking at all times and plastered with signs designated "No Parking at Any Time."

Anyone who is obliged to visit any of these places is practically compelled to park his car upon a lot because the streets are so largely closed to all parking, although no consideration of public convenience and necessity require the prohibition of all parking at so great a distance from our downtown area, and no such parking ban had ever existed until these new parking lots opened for business. There has been little change in traffic in this area for some time, nor any new buildings erected or any increase in the congestion, so that the only interpretation I can make of the new parking ban is a sinister one. G. O. P. Following Whigs?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Unless the Republicans can get themselves together on a platform that will appeal to the masses of the American people there are portentious signs that the party will eventually disintegrate as did its predecessor, the Whig Party. At the present time it does not seem consolidated on any particular issue except opposition to the Democratic Party.

It still has many able members and it has the prestige of having been a great party at one time, especially during the Civil War and for several years after, but for some reason or other seems to have lost its vital force and lacks the cohesion that once distinguished it.

A significant feature of the present situation is the evidence that rather than nominate one of its tried and experienced leaders in national affairs, its prevailing sentiment is to nominate as its candidate the Governor of a Western State, little known outside but with a greater appeal to liberalism than its better known candidates have evinced. Is not this an implied, if not intended compliment to Roosevelt? JOHN G. TOWNSEND.

"Tobacco Road."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The writer has witnessed the much publicized and criticized drama, "Tobacco Road." I had not read its appraisal by ony of the several competent dramatic critics of Washington and had a vague idea it might be a problem play based on the poverty of poor white Georgia sharecroppers resulting from cotton and tobacco "plowing under," or something of that sort.

Will say that I have attended theatrical performances of every kind since the age of ten, toured the "midways" of four worlds' expositions and am not sensitive, but this performance tops everything for concentrated filth. It teaches no lesson and is too disgusting to be entertaining. Nothing like it in real life ever happened, anyway.

What puzzles me is how the "jury" of Mr. Garnett's attorneys found this conglomeration of indecency to be not objectionable.

Air Commerce Inquiry.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter of C. J. Horat, which appeared in The Post of April 11, was of deep interest to me inasmuch as I am a former co-worker of Mr. Horat and have some knowledge of his service with the Air Commerce Bureau. It would be interesting if unfavorable criticism of the bureau could be answered by publicizing the personnel records and causes of separation of those who have left it.

The article by Mr. Vidal in The Post of April 5 is exact and true and should Mr. Horat now be in the Air Commerce service he would agree to the facts as set forth in Mr. Vidal's letter.

In passing its final verdict it is sincerely hoped that the Senate investigation of the Bureau of Air Commerce, now current, will take into consideration all factors connected with the disparaging statements of former commerce employes.

Watts Run Project?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: This space is requested to publicize and obtain through the columns of your paper information as to whether or not it would be more profitable for the labor now being used for the renovation of local parks be used in the reclamation of Watts Run.

There have been many protests concerning the removal of trees, etc., in the city parks by the WPA, and as many, many letters and pictures substantiating claims for changing the channel of this small obstreperous stream located in the extreme northeast section have been sent without avail, the query is, why should not some of the men be spared for this much desired and most necessary project?

The Post Impressionist

History-Mystery.

Post Office, Tuesday.

SIR WALTER RALEGH—or, for the matter of that, Raleigh—was "an English soldier, author and navigator" (1552-1618) and had hotels and cigarettes named for him. He introduced tobacco to his fellow countrymen.

Dr. Samuel Claggett Chew (Ph. D., Johns Hopkins, 1909) happily is still professor of English at Bryn Mawr.

Edward Thompson—The fact is, we are deplorably ignorant of Edward Thompson's identity. All we know is that, however silent he is autobiographically, he has an entertaining theory of biography.

Mr. Thompson has written a life of Sir Walter. (Sir Walter Ralegh, Yale University Press).

Dr. Chew doesn't care for it. We do.

In Ralegh's career there was one action that we could never understand—that, indeed, has always remained as much a mystery to every scholar as to every schoolboy. As it was this action of Sir Walter that, from across the world, finally headed him to his beheading, it was rather important.

We refer, of course, to the ill-starred Orinoco expedition and the suicide of Lawrence Kemys.

During Elizabeth's reign, Ralegh had been the enemy of Essex, and their ultimate reconciliation was more diplomatic than real. But James regarded Essex as his friend and, when James came to the throne, he harried Sir Walter, who, moreover, wanted a fresh war with Spain, which the English King was anxious to avoid.

Ralegh was charged with complicity in the web of conspiracies then troubling the monarch. Knowledge of their existence the prisoner probably possessed; his active participation was doubtful. Nevertheless, a capital sentence was passed upon him; he was committed to the Tower of London in 1603. When the British press next reproaches us Americans for keeping our death-sentenced prisoners alive too long, some of us may bethink ourselves to remind the transatlantic cousins that Ralegh remained in the deathhouse for 13 years.

Then he promised that, if released, he would secure for James a bit of territory in Guiana, containing a gold mine. Yes, sir, they did it even 300 years before Grover Bergdoll! And the avaricious King let Ralegh sail—St. Patrick's Day, 1617—warning him that, if he got into trouble with the Spanish settlements out there, he'd be executed as soon as he returned.

"Very well," as the late Senator Albert J. Beveridge used to say in those advice-to-youth articles which we edited for the Saturday Evening Post: the expedition arrives at the mouth of the Orinoco on the last day of the year. Ralegh, desperately ill, dispatches Kemys "up the river to discover and work the gold mine"—Dr. Chew's words, in the New York Herald Tribune—the "instructions being to avoid any clash with the Spaniards. Yet clash they did"—and the expedition failed. One of Ralegh's sons was killed by the Dons; Kemys killed himself.

Then Sir Walter sailed home, to what was—and what he must have known would be, unless he had something to say for himself—death.

Why? Why didn't he go anywhere else under Heaven?

That's the riddle nobody has satisfactorily explained—except our Mr. Thompson. He guesses that Ralegh did indeed have something to say for himself—and guesses what it was.

Dr. Chew thus summarizes:

"Mr. Thompson's theory is that Ralegh had instructed him (Kemys) to land some 20 miles from the Spanish settlement at St. Thome, penetrate . . . into the jungle, and there seek out a second mine of whose (sic) existence Ralegh had hearsay and of which he had not informed King James; that Kemys failed to follow these orders and proceeded upstream to the first mine . . . only 3 or 4 miles from St. Thome; and that the disaster was in consequence of this."

In other words, Ralegh thought he had an adequate defense—but didn't count on the King's chagrin at losing both his gold-mine and Spain's good will. The net result was a suppression of the defense and Sir Walter's loss of something else: i. e., his head.

We submit that this is a mighty clever explanation—almost the only one which, short of idiocy, would fit the facts. And, little as we admire many things about Ralegh, we don't believe he was either mentally deficient or a Gaston Means.

Well, Dr. Chew, while admitting that the theory is "ingenious," condems it because "there is no contemporary evidence to support the argument."

* * *

The Post-Impressionist remembers Dr. Chew most pleasantly from the early days of the Franklin Inn Club. We have a high respect for Dr. Chew as a professor of English. But we should like to ask him why, when there is no contemporary evidence to support any argument, that man isn't doing a good job who supplies a thoroughly satisfactory guess as the solution of an historic mystery.

Freedom Of The Press

I don't know all the details of the attempt to seize and pore over the private and confidential correspondence of William Randolph Hearst, just offhand I would be willing to join in deploring the outrage, not that it needs any help, what with his great staff of writers and cartoonists, his movie and radio interests and his own gift of vigorous protest in open letters to himself.

So I will just say in regard to Mr. Hearst's strident protest that I think so, too, and go on to suggest that the freedom of the press which he is now defending also imposes certain heavy obligations on the owners of the press.

* * * *

The freedom of the press is more precious than people realize until it is suddenly abolished, as in Italy, Germany, Russia, Austria and other countries where truth, crushed to earth, may rise again some day but, in the meanwhile, is taking a very long count. We may find fault with the professional ethics of some of our publishers from time to time, and this is not to deny that we have some local dictators in the newspaper business who have run things with a high and unscrupulous hand for a little while. But never in this country has any one paper or chain of papers been able to control the National Government, and the little newsprint Mussolinis and Hitlers, like Tammen and Bonfils, either die or lose their power through the angry opposition of honest publishers whose zeal for reform redeems for the press the sins of the erring brother.

On the whole, the newspapers of this country have exposed and corrected so many wrongs and wrought so many material and political improvements in their respective communities and in the Nation at large, that the score of the bad actors in the business is comparatively small.

* * * *

Still I don't believe there has ever been a time when the general public has kept such a close watch on the newspaper business as today, and certainly never in my time have the people been so inquisitive regarding reasons why a publisher takes a certain attitude on a given proposition or candidate. I may exaggerate the intelligence of the readers, but it seems to me that nowadays they are inclined to scoff at the romance of journalism and to put a mental resistance against propaganda and news which has been colored for motives which can only be felt rather than sensed or seen. I believe Mr. Roosevelt started this skepticism early in his reign when he reminded the press that the boon of freedom was accomplished by compensating duties and responsibilities toward the community which confers the privilege.

In plainer words, the freedom of the press does not include a right to blackguard anyone who gets in a publisher's way in politics, business or private social matters, nor should it confer on a mighty publisher the right to ruin a man by keeping him out of print for motives of personal spite.

The press is a trust which obviously calls for highest character, and when an order comes down to silence a public character by excluding his name from the paper for selfish reasons for the purpose of doing him harm that is an abuse of the trust. There are some newspaper employes, particularly in the prizefight trade and in the Hollywood end of the business, who have become petty tyrants and racketeers, practicing something which amounts to coercion if not extortion on individuals whose living depends on publicity and who therefore are afraid to offend them.

These are matters of common knowledge in cauliflower circles in New York and notorious in the movie industry, which is no infant any more, and the freedom of the press thus is more seriously threated from within than by any current action of the executive or legislative branch of the Government. There is always a certain proportion of newspaper employes who are grafters by nature and who approach journalism with undeniable newspaper skill but with absolutely no "feel" for the business. The percentage is small, but the scandal is great and the reputation of the American press suffers disproportionately for the conduct of a few members who are not the type and never did belong.

Our journalism is the best in the world on the average. The journalism of the slave countries where dictators edit the papers may be left out of consideration altogether, not being journalism at all. There are three big major league nations with a free press. But the French press, though free, is notoriously corrupt. The British press includes some of the best in the world, but only a little and below their best newspapers and journalists the class falls abruptly. Their inferior press is not so much corrupt, however, as just stupid and silly and dishonest in a harmless way.

I don't think there is any present danger that our press will be censored or licensed, but in view of the present hard-boiled attitude of the citizens is behooves all of us to keep our motives reasonably clean.

The Peace Ballot

Second Anniversary Of British Experiment, Testing Sentiment Of 12,000,000 Persons, Emphasizes Force Of Average Man's Vote.

By Violet K. Libby,
Special Correspondence of The Post.

If the plain ordinary people are convinced of the fundamental rightness of a movement it will live and grow; without that approval it will just as surely wither and die. No treaty, no constitutional amendment, means anything, nor can it be enforced, unless it rests squarely on the sound basis of public approval.

When the British Peace Ballot was quietly initiated two years ago this month, it marked a new departure in political history and was destined to become a democratic experiment of major importance, of which the full value can still hardly be assessed. At that time, ordinarily well-informed writers and political leaders of all faiths, both in Great Britain and elsewhere, were generally agreed that the cause of international co-operation through the League of Nations was virtually dead. They were convinced that public interest in the principles of collective security was apathetic, and that the League entirely lacked the public approval on which it must depend for its very existence.

But just when it seemed as if the experiment at Geneva might as well be abandoned, something happened which injected new life into the moribund infant. That something was the dramatic declaration of overwhelming approval for the principles of collective security made by nearly 12,000,000 people of Great Britain through the medium of the Peace Ballot.

* * * *

That amazing and entirely unofficial referendum, carried through by half a million volunteer workers, involved far more than a simple gathering of figures. The people were asked to vote yes or no on certain vital and controversial questions, and the way they answered them left no possible doubt of their opinion. Those questions, which may be recalled here, were answered by 38 per cent of all men and women over 18 years of age in Great Britain, actually a greater number than usually votes in a general election!

They were:

1. Should Great Britain remain a member of the League of Nations? Yes: 11,090,387; No: 355,883; Abstentions and doubtful: 112,895.

2. Are you in favor of an all-round reduction of armaments by international agreement? Yes: 10,470,489; No: 862,775; Abstentions and doubtful: 225,901.

3. Are you in favor of all-round abolition of national military and naval aircraft by international agreement? Yes: 9,533,553; No: 1,689,782; Abstentions and doubtful: 335,821.

4. Should the manufacture and sale of armaments for private profit be prohibited by international agreement? Yes: 10,417,329; No: 775,415; Abstentions and doubtful: 366,421.

5. Do you consider that, if a nation insists on attacking another, the other nations should combine to compel it to stop by:

(a) Economic and non-military measures? Yes: 10,027,608; No: 635,074; Abstentions and doubtful: 882,362.

(b) If necessary, military measures? Yes: 6,784,368; No: 2,351,981; Abstentions and doubtful: 2,405,334.

* * * *

For some time, the significance of that declaration, in a country in which government depends to a unique degree on the will of the people, was not fully appreciated, either at home or abroad. It is usual for statesmen and diplomats, in England as elsewhere, to take a "Papa knows best" attitude on questions of foreign policy. The rank and file of the people, unable to appreciate the fine points of diplomatic jugglery, have been expected to follow blindly, even if the path led, as it almost inevitably did, to the shambles of war.

The delegation which waited on the Prime Minister to acquaint him formally with the results of the ballot met with a chilly reception, but with a general election at hand a vote cast by 38 per cent of the adult population of the country could hardly be ignored. The new ministry assumed office definitely committed to the policy of collective security through the League.

As soon as Mussolini assumed a belligerent attitude in the Mediterranean, however, the old "papa knows best" policy was quickly readopted, and the Hoare-Laval offer was proposed.

It was then that the full strength behind the Peace Ballot movement became evident.

* * * *

The plain man, who had voted over 10,000,000 strong that an aggressor must be stopped, once again spoke his mind. Ignoring the niceties of diplomatic maneuvering, he unequivocally condemned Italian aggression against Ethiopia, and called for justice to be done, cost what it might, with results unprecedented in diplomatic history.

More recently he has cleared the air and staved off war by the unanswerable logic of his argument that Germany has cause for complaint and that permanent peace can be secured only by an equitable settlement of differences round the conference table.

This stand of the man-in-the-street against what he believes to be the war-breeding methods of old-fashioned diplomacy has already played, and will continue to play, an important part in shaping the course of international affairs. And it was due, in very large measure, to the opportunity which the Peace Ballot gave him to become articulate.

Two years after its inception it may be interesting to recall the history and development of this new democratic experiment which assumed proportions and achieved results far beyond the most sanguine expectations of its sponsors.

It was just at the time when the prestige of the League appeared to be at its ebb, and the whole cause of international co-operation seemed on the point of being thrown into the discard, that Viscount Cecil conceived the idea of asking the people themselves what they felt about the matter. Cecil, one of the founders of the League, and a British representative on many occasions at the meetings of the Assembly and Council, refused to believe that the League was dead, and was convinced that, appearances to the contrary, the people of Great Britain, if given the opportunity, would voice a definite approval of the principles which it represented.

* * * *

The League of Nations Union, to which this plan for a national declaration was first broached, at once sought the co-operation of a number of other national organizations in carrying out the scheme. A conference was called, which was attended by delegates from representative national bodies, the three political parties, the churches, peace societies, women's organizations, co-operative guilds and so on. Between them they drafted the questions to be asked, and drew up a plan of campaign. An executive committee, known as the National Declaration Committee, was set up under the chairmanship of Lord Cecil.

Over a thousand local committees were set up all over the country, representing the various national organizations associated with the National Declaration Committee, which enlisted through their membership over half a million volunteer workers.

It was this 500,000 men and women, working irrespective of creed or politics, with no prospect of personal gain or party spoils, impelled solely by an ideal of world peace, which accomplished the seemingly impossible task of carrying through an unofficial national referendum which recorded close to 12,000,000 votes. They carried the ballots to every house, and called again to collect them. Ample time was given the householder and his family to discuss and think over the questions, and frequently the worker had to make many calls before the ballot was ready, a job calling for much patience, perseverance and good shoe leather.

But soon the completed ballots began to pour into the tiny headquarters where they overflowed into every available inch of space. The 5,000,000 mark, which the committee in its most sanguine moments had thought might be attained, was soon left far behind. In the spring of 1935, Lord Cecil was able to announce, at a meeting at the Albert Hall, that nearly 12,000,000 people had given their definite approval to the principles of international co-operation and collective security through the League.

"Do not think," he said at that time, "that the ballot is an end in itself! It is just a stage in the struggle for peace. It must be made the starting point for further exertion. The price of peace, like the price of liberty, is eternal vigilance . . ."

William N. Payne, jr., secretary of the Eastern Building and Loan Association, and Howard B. Kramer, American Building Association, were elected to the board of governors for the ensuing three years.

Building Honesty

By Karl Schriftgiesser

Rambles of Visitors

Easter week is traditionally the week when thousands of tourists flock to Washington. Mainly they go about, looking at cherry blossoms and statues and buildings, sometimes invading such places as the Government Printing Office, the Smithsonian Institution. I wandered among hundreds of them, yesterday, hoping to overhear what they might think of, what they were seeing.

Well, they could look at the incredible grotesqueries of the Smithsonian Institution without expressing horror at this absurd and aggravating expression of how not to build a building. They could look at the mass of Government atrocities in the Triangle without asking why they had been piled in such disregard for the humans who must work in them. And not one of them, I am sure, saw, or were told to see, what is perhaps the only honest expression of true architecture in Washington.

I refer to the building commonly known as the Federal Warehouse, officially listed as the Procurement Building of the Treasury Department, whose white mass rises above the desolation of Southwest Washington. Determined to call attention to this building and yet knowing that such a column might excite horror among the tory architects who think that building stopped before Rome fell, I recalled a story Lewis Mumford once told me.

* * * *

Lewis Mumford, the most independent of architectural critics in America, was once chided by an editor, after he had written a severe castigation of some new building in New York, because he was not a trained architect. "Why do you say such bitter things. After all, you never built a building and aren't an architect."

"Do I have to be a hen," asked Mumford, "to know when an egg is rotten?"

The beauty of the Procurement Building may not be apparent to anyone who sees something to gasp about when looking at the Library of Congress. But to anyone with eyes that look beyond the vagaries of ornament the first sight of this building will be memorable. Not that it is one of America's great buildings, but because it is, so far as I know, the only expression of architectural honesty in the District.

Except above its entrances there is no added design. There it is of the simplest nature, where useful lines terminate, forming a minor shield. Elsewhere there is hardly a line in the building which does not express the purpose of the structure. You know it is a warehouse, not only because it is alongside railroad tracks, but because it does not hide its utilitarian head in shame.

Would you have any idea what the Archives Building meant to house? Would you know what the Supreme Court Building was supposed to be? These are fair questions to ask in looking at any building. And this, too, should be remembered. Architecture is the possession of everyone. It is not an art for the walls of a museum, but it is permanent, out in the open where everyone may see it, but everyone who passes it must see it. If the people bore this in mind Washington might have been saved from becoming the "mess" that men like Charles Harris Whitaker or Lewis Mumford are forever saying it is.

The white warehouse, some seven stories high, and stretching over a length of territory, stands out. Its lines move upward, not like Claude Bragdon's "frozen fountain," because a silly law prevents buildings from soaring in Washington. But it is not supported by false columns, it is not encumbered by false arches, and every section blends into the next one, while the architect has refrained honestly from trying to hide the fundamental structure of the building.

The windows have not been fussed with, they are just plain, large, honest windows. The corners of the building stretch up higher than the level sections, and purposefully, because they are there to house certain things essential to the function of a modern warehouse. From any angle, the building stands there, expressing itself, a building of today.

* * * *

I am fondest of looking at it through an alley that runs from D street between Seventh and Eighth. The dingy decrepitude of this old, shack-infested alley sets forth the decent strength of the Procurement Building and makes you think, ironically, of the saying on a statue to Daguerre, the photographer, which stands in the park of the abysmal Smithsonian Institution, and which tells you: "Photography, the electric telegraph, and the steam engine are the three great discoveries of the age. No five centuries in human progress can show such strides as these."

Not even the houses we live in, nor the buildings in which we must work?

Ramsey MacDonald Prepares for Operation

London, April 13 (AP).—Ramsay MacDonald, former prime minister, will enter a nursing home tomorrow for a minor operation.

The treatment, the nature of which was not disclosed, will keep the British member of Parliament from his duties for at least a fortnight.

MacDonald's health was partly responsible for his resignation from the premiership last June, and he has recently been under a heavy strain because of Italo-Ethiopian and Locarno negotiations in which he has taken an active part.

Boeing Enlarges Airport.

New York, April 13 (AP).—Purchase of a 28-acre site adjacent to Boeing Field, Seattle, was announced today by Boeing Aircraft Co. A large modern assembly building will be erected on the site, together with other additions as business warrants, the company stated.

Session Opens Drive Against Social Diseases

Physicians Address 34th Conference of Health Officers Here.

Signaling the opening of a Nation-wide crusade against venereal disease, the thirty-fourth annual conference of State and Territorial health officers opened here yesterday with a broadside attack upon syphilis, coupled with suggested programs for combating it.

Delegates representing practically every American State and Territory were welcomed by Miss Josephine Roche, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in charge of the Public Health Service, and Dr. Thomas Parran, jr., surgeon general. Miss Roche spoke in place of Secretary Morgenthau, who could not attend the opening of the two-day meeting in the Health Service Building.

The morning session was devoted exclusively to a symposium on the control of syphilis. Industrial hygiene was the subject of the afternoon assembly, speakers asserting most of the States are appropriating inadequate funds for this activity.

Honor Cumming, Parran.

Dr. Parran and Dr. Hugh S. Cumming, retiring surgeon general of the Public Health Service, were honored by the health officers at a dinner last night in the Willard Hotel. The latter plans to sail for Europe this week.

Some of the country's leading syphilologists addressed the delegates, all of them agreeing public education is one of the most powerful tools in fighting social diseases. They included Dr. R. A. Vonderlehr, assistant surgeon general in charge of venereal disease control; Dr. Joseph Earle Moore, of Johns Hopkins Hospital; Dr. Dudley C. Smith, University of Virginia Medical School; Dr. A. J. Casselman, New Jersey Health Department; Dr. John H. Stokes, University of Pennsylvania Medical School, and Dr. N. A. Nelson, Massachusetts Health Department.

Dr. Moore said approximately 1,100,000 new cases of syphilis are treated annually but if all cases were properly diagnosed and given early treatment the figure would be closer to 3,000,000. Over the country as a whole, treatment facilities are available for only one infected case out of four, he said.

Assail Prudery.

Stressing the need for mass education against the peril, he said if this country produced 1,000,000 cases of smallpox, typhoid fever, infantile paralysis or meningitis each year the public would demand immediate action by health officers.

Establishment of more public health laboratories and clinics alone will not settle the problem, said Dr. Stokes, emphasizing the necessity of enlisting the co-operatioin of private physicians. He urged the introduction in medical schools of special courses in diagnosis and treatment of the venereal diseases.

Dr. Nelson assailed ignorance and prudery, "for without public understanding of their nature and their menace it is practically impossible to control them." He cited the difficulty of obtaining appropriate educational material, urging the initiation of propaganda that will be understandable to the layman.

Dr. Vonderlehr spoke of the widespread suffering and economic loss caused by syphilis and asked health officers to promote campaigns against it. Dr. Moore discussed the epidemiology of the disease and Dr. Casselman discussed the value of efficient laboratory service in a control program.

Smithsonian Seeks to Exhibit The President's 'Mystery Fish'

By the Associated Press.

The Smithsonian Institution yesterday asked President Roosevelt's permission to preserve the "mystery fish" which he caught on his recent cruise and which has been identified as a "particularly fine" great amberjack.

The 30-pound fish was turned over by the President to the institution for study. Alexander Wetmore, assistant secretary, sent the following letter yesterday to Marvin H. McIntyre, a secretary to Mr. Roosevelt:

"The 'mystery fish' has come safely to hand, and is identified as a great amberjack of the genus seriola.

"Fishes of this group are not fully understood at present by scientists, due in part to the fact that, as in the case of various other large fish, it is difficult to preserve specimens because of their size, so that few are found in museum collections.

"Of this particular type of amberjack there are two forms, one that has a deep body, known scientifically as seriola dumerilli, and one that is slender bodied, called scientifically seriola lalandi. The President's fish is of the latter type. Our ichthyologists in the National Museum consider the two as distinct, though by some these two are called one species. The fish is a particularly fine one and is different from anything that we have in our scientific collections.

"The range of the slender bodied great amberjack is given as from western Florida to Brazil, while occasionally it wanders as far north as New Jersey.

"If the President will approve, we should like to make a cast of this particular fish that would be painted and be a life-sized replica to put on exhibition, and to preserve the actual fish entire in alcohol in order that it may serve for scientific studies and be preserved in that form in our collections. Or, if preferred, the fish can be skinned and mounted for exhibition in that manner.

"We shall appreciate word from you on this. In the meantime we are keeping the fish carefully refrigerated."

Bill to Purchase Hospital Land Loses by Veto

Roosevelt Opposes Plan to Add 22 Acres to Grounds at Walter Reed.

President Roosevelt yesterday proved to Congress that he meant what he said when he disapproved of a bill to permit the Secretary of War to buy 23 additional acres for extension of the grounds of Walter Reed Hospital. He vetoed the measure.

Both the House and the Senate Military Affairs committees had reported the bill favorably despite the warning from the Budget Bureau that it was not in accord with the President's financial program. The legislation authorized an appropriation of $204,162.

"I have caused this matter to be looked into, and it appears that the purchase of the land in question is advocated for the reasons that it will provide for a possible need for expansion of Army hospital facilities in the event of war," the veto message stated, "and in the meantime provide space for the erection of quarters for medical officers attached to the present hospital, resulting in a material annual saving in expenditures."

As to the first question, the President said that "there now exist certain open areas in the present reservation available for possible war-time ward expansion."

Regarding the second, he said that quarters are now available for all of the 105 officers attached to the hospital and that there is space to set up housing for 20-odd additional officers.

"Convincing proof that the remaining officers should reside upon the reservation to insure the efficient functioning of the hospital has not been supplied," the message stated.

If the land were acquired, it concluded, approximately $850,000 would be requested to provide quarters for 50 more officers.

Hopkins Cites Relief Need

mental aid will be necessary as long as prolonged mass unemployment persists."

These statements were taken to indicate that the Administration has no intention of deviating from its present program, which Hopkins said "is based on the concept that the aid to the destitute unemployed should be given in the form of useful work instead of relief grants."

Meanwhile, a small bloc of House members who are demanding that $700,000,000 of the proposed $1,500,000,000 relief appropriation be earmarked for use of the Public Works Administration under Secretary Ickes appointed a committee of 15 to circulate a petition asking that this be done.

Bell Before Committee.

A sub-committee of the Appropriations Committee continued to consider the appropriation. Before the committee were Daniel W. Bell, acting budget director, and David Lasser, of New York, national chairman of the Worker Alliance of America, an organization of unemployed and WPA workers. Lasser asked that the WPA be put under the direction of a board rather than a "dictator." He said he believed an appropriation as high as $6,000,000,000 would be necessary for an adequate relief program.

The conference of House members favoring a PWA allotment was called by Representative Beiter (Democrat), New York. Beiter objected that Ickes had not been called before the committee. He contended that the impression that the Hopkins organization provided more work in proportion to money spent than the PWA was erroneous.

Later Representative Bacon (Republican), New York, a member of the Appropriations Committee, said he would insist that Ickes be called. Chairman Buchanan said the Interior Secretary had not been asked to present his views because there was no estimate of any money to be spent by him before the committee. Hopkins had previously estimated that his organization needed virtually all the proposed $1,500,000,000 appropriation.

Beiter Is Chairman.

Beiter was made chairman of the committee to circulate the petition. Other members are Representatives McFarland, Texas; Green, Florida; Connery, Massachusetts; Gingery, Pennsylvania; Lambeth, North Carolina; Colmer, Mississippi; Chandler, Tennessee; Randolph, West Virginia; Griswold, Indiana; Dobbins, Illinois; Gillette, Iowa; Houston, Kansas; Dempsey, New Mexico, and Lea, California.

Coincident with the Hopkins report, the National Industrial Conference Board reported that 5,413,000 more people are now at work than in March, 1933. President Roosevelt recently estimated the number at 5,000,000.

The board pointed out, however, that this increase in employment has not yet contributed materially to a solution of the relief problem. It said that the President's estimate of 5,300,000 relief cases would indicate that approximately 18,890,000 persons, or 14.8 per cent of the population, are receiving relief in some form.

The report said that 79.5 per cent of the people on relief are manual workers, compared with 58 per cent of the people as a whole. White collar workers represent 11.2 per cent of the number on relief and 30.3 per cent of the total population.

Hopkins reported that the Works Progress Administration was responsible for 80 per cent of the jobs made available to relief workers by the Government. Of 3,853,000 persons employed under the work program on February 29, Hopkins said 3,039,000 were employed by WPA, 459,000 by the CCC, and 355,000 by all other agencies, including WPA.

Hopkins said that it is estimated $250,000,000 will be contributed by local sponsors of WPA projects, and a like amount by sponsors of PWA projects.

Analyzes Expenditures.

Hopkins said that relief funds spent up to December, 1935, was divided by percentages as follows: highways, roads and streets, 31.8 per cent; CCC, 18.8 per cent; conservation work other than CCC, 10.9 per cent; construction and addition to public buildings, 10.8 per cent; water and sewer systems, 6.3 per cent; housing, 5.1 per cent; playgrounds, parks and recreational facilities, 4.3 per cent.

Under WPA, a total of 163,000 projects that would cost almost $5,000,000,000 are available, Hopkins said, although only $1,117,688,914 has been allocated for this purpose.

Through last December the WPA had spent $46,000,000 for purchase of materials, the report said.

A section of the report is devoted to each of the relief agencies, although most of it is given over to a discussion of the WPA. The National Youth Administration, it is reported, aided 289,000 students and had given employment to 100,000 other young people. It estimated that 2,875,000 persons between the ages of 16 and 25 are on relief.

On December 29 the Public Works Administration was employing only 14,000 persons, the report said, although it expected to increase the number eventually to 280,000.

Dr. Hayes Says Schools Work Against Peace

Deplores Nationalist Trend in an Address Before Catholic Group.

"One great hope for the human race is that many people react against what they learn in school," said Dr. Carlton J. H. Hayes, of Columbia University, at the conference of the Catholic Association for International Peace at the Mayflower last night.

Dr. Hayes, showing that nationalism was a force against peace today, said it was due in large part to "deliberate, purposeful education." Children, he said, are indoctrinated with nationalistic tendencies in the schools."

Language and religion, he said, are other forces which make for nationalism, which, he explained, was therefore not merely economic or political, but cultural.

Talks on Finance.

Other speakers at the panel discussion were Charles G. Fenwick, professor of political science at Bryn Mawr; the Right Rev. John A. Ryan, of Catholic University; Dr. Parker Thomas Moon, of Columbia University; Dr. Elizabeth M. Lynskey, of Hunter College, N. Y.; Dr. George Finch, of the Carnegie International Peace Foundation; the Rev. John LaFarge, S. J., associate editor of America; Michael Francis Doyle and Dr. Francis E. McMahon.

At the afternoon session of the conference the speakers took up the economic interdependence of nations in its relationship with world peace.

Speaking on international finance as an aspect of economic interdependence, the Rev. Laurence Kent Patterson, S. J., professor of Woodstock College, Md., said he did not share the tendency to blame war on the international bankers. That theory, he said, was too simple.

"Kind of Sublimation."

Father Patterson said that, while he did not consider the World War a bankers' conspiracy, he believed "once you begin lending money to a belligerent you're going to get into war."

"It's a kind of sublimation," he said. "You lend a man money—then you think he ought to win." He remarked that the activities of munitions makers were "symptoms, not causes of war."

Other speakers during the afternoon were Dr. Moon, whose paper, "Economics and the New World Order," was the basis of the discussion; George L. McCabe of Catholic University; Dr. Joseph Solterer of Georgetown University; the Rev. Edgar Schmiedeler, O. S. B.; Dr. Elizabeth Morrissey of Notre Dame College, Baltimore, Md., and the Rev. R. A. McGowan.

Step to Replace NRA Is Hinted By Roosevelt

U. S. Action to Cut Work Week Considered, He Says in Baltimore.

motor drive from the White House, President Roosevelt entered a city which, it appeared for the night at least, had forgotten partisan and factional differences. With the President was Mrs. Roosevelt and the usual Presidential aids.

Preceding the President's arrival, Baltimore Democrats with several hundred Washingtonians participating, staged an old-fashioned torchlight parade—the type with plenty of red fire which was the delight of our grandfathers.

Party Leaders Attend.

The meeting was a rallying place for the Nation's democracy as well as that of Baltimore and Maryland. Not only was every Democratic State leader worth the name present, but the party's national leaders, led by Vice President John N. Garner, and Postmaster General James A. Farley were present as well. Cabinet members attending, in addition to Farley, were Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes and Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace nominally Republicans—and Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper.

Conspicuous on the front row was WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins, sitting near Charles Michelson and Emil Hurja.

Speaker Joseph Byrns and Senate Democratic Leader Joe T. Robinson sat beside each other on the platform, with Senator Key Pittman, president pro tem of the Senate and E. Brooke Lee, of Montgomery County nearby. Altogether there were about 30 Democratic members of the Senate present and almost as many members from the House. Immediately under the President in the press stand sat the sage of Baltimore and that vitrolic assailant of the New Deal, Henry L. Mencken, cynicism registering on his face.

When the President entered the huge armory, the crowd of more than 15,000 burst into applause, shouts and yells, which grew in intensity as Mr. Roosevelt advanced to the speaker's rostrum. Flags, canes and umbrellas were waved as confetti and torn paper streamed down from the balconies. The din became deafening.

Did Not Equal Others.

Yet the applause did not reach the peak registered in October, 1932, when Mr. Roosevelt, speaking in this hall declared he favored legalizing beer. Nor could this demonstration compare with that given Al Smith in 1928 when in this place he denounced the Ku Klux Klan—nor, to make a still further comparison, was the outburns as great as that which in 1912 here acclaimed Woodrow Wilson the nominee of the Democratic party after weeks of a fierce struggle.

Nor did the President, as he proceeded, whip his audience into any frenzied outbursts comparable to those which have been cited. Only once, until his conclusion, did the audience really let go with applause, and that was when he declared, "I say to you do something, and when you have done something, if it works, do it some more; and if it does not work, do something else." That received a big hand.

Aside from this incident, however, the applause for the speech was not particularly intense or enthusiastic. Hundreds of men in dinner jackets, with ladies in evening gowns—a dance was held after the speech—sat like stoics throughout the address. At the end the applause was not as great as that which marked Mr. Roosevelt's entry.

As the crowd of loyal Democrats entered the armory, boys distributed "Vote for Breckinridge" circulars. The referred to Henry C. Breckinridge, challenging Mr. Roosevelt for the primary preferential vote in Maryland in next month's election. The circulars called on the President's audience to remember that in 1932 Mr. Roosevelt had said, "Remember that attitude and method—the way we do things, not just the way we say things, is nearly always the measure of one's sincerity."

Thunderous Ovation.

In opening his address before the microphones which carried his words throughout the country, the President reminded the Nation's youth that the world in which it lived today was not that of its fathers—that some of the certainties of yesterday had vanished and others had been questioned.

Having walked the streets during this depression seeking jobs that could not be found, "flaming youth has become a flaming question," the President said, adding that youth had a right to have its questions answered by those seeking its confidence.

Mr. Roosevelt outlined the objective, in the widest sense, of young people as "an opportunity to make an honest living; a reasonable chance to improve your condition in life as you grow older; a practical assurance against want and suffering in your old age, and with it all the right to participate in the finer things of life—good health, clean amusement, and a part in the satisfactions of the arts, sciences and religion."

No answer to the problems of youth is fit, Mr. Roosevelt continued, unless "it carries some definite prospect of a practical down-to-earth solution of your problems."

Ridicules "Panaceas."

He ridiculed "panaceas" such proposed remedies for the country's economic ills as monetary stability based on gold, acceptance by the United States of responsibility as the world's greatest creditor nation and puting Federal finances in order. Mr. Roosevelt asked his audience whether there is "even a recognition in that type of panacea of the fact that the youth of America has any problems at all."

"No," he replied, adding: "You have a right to expect something better than that. You have a right to expect that those in authority will do everything within their power to help restore conditions that make employment and opportunity possible; more than that, that you will be protected, insofar as is humanly possible, from the physical and mental and spiritual ravages of economic and social maladjustment."

Proposals to return to the era of confidence and prosperity of 1928 represented no answer, said the President, adding that "1928 was no millenium." Even in that year,

Text of President Roosevelt's Speech at Young Democrats' Rally in Baltimore

You in this great armory tonight represent a cross-section of millions of young people who have come to maturity since 1929. You are the symbol of young men and women living in every State of the Union, affiliated with every political party and belonging to every so-called stratum of society.

The world in which the millions of you have come of age is not the set old world of your fathers. Some of yesterday's certainties have vanished; many of yesterday's certainties are questioned. Why have some vanished and many been questioned? Because the facts and needs of civilization have changed more greatly in this generation than in the century that preceded us.

I need not press that point with you. You are measuring the present state of the world out of your own experiences. You have felt the rough hand of the depression. You have walked the streets looking for jobs that never turned up. Out of this has come physical hardship and, more serious, the scars of disillusionment.

The temper of our youth has become more restless, more critical, more challenging. Flaming youth has become a flaming question. And youth comes to us wanting to know what we propose to do about a society that hurts so many of them.

There is much to justify the inquiring attitude of youth. You have a right to ask these questions—practical questions. No man who seeks to evade or to avoid deserves your confidence.

Many older people seem to take unmerited pride in the mere fact that they are adults. When youth comes crashing in on them with enthusiasm and ideals, they put on their most patronizing smiles and pat the young man or the young woman on the shoulder and in a worldly wise sort of way send them out with what they call their blessing. But—as every young person knows—that is not a blessing; it is a cold shower. What they have really said to you is: "You're young. Enjoy your enthusiasms and your ideals while you can. When you grow up and get out in the world you will know better." And the tragedy is that so many young people do just that: they do grow up and, growing up, they grow away from their enthuiasms and from their ideals. That is one reason why the world into which they go gets better so slowly.

Cites Objective Of Young People.

Your objective in the widest sense is, I take it, this: an opportunity to make an honest living; a reasonable chance to improve your condition in life as you grow older; a practical assurance against want and suffering in your old age; and with it all the right to participate in the finer things of life—good health, clean amusement, and a part in the satisfactions of the arts, the sciences and religion.

Faced with that objective, it is clear that many of the old answers are not the right answers. No answer, new or old, is fit for your thought unless it is framed in terms of what you face and what you desire—unless it carries some definite prospect of a practical down-to-earth solution of your problems.

For the next few months you are going to be thoroughly bored by so-called answers. There are two or three new panaceas in every day's paper. Here is one I picked out at random from three on the same page of one newspaper. The eminent author suggests a four-point cure for all our ills. I hope you will be as thrilled and excited by them as I was Here they are:

1. Establish a monetary unit with a definite gold content, subject to change only by Congress.
2. Restore convertibility of money into gold coin and private ownership of gold.
3. Accept responsibility as the world's greatest creditor nation.
4. Put Federal finances in order.

I ask you what do panacea planks like these offer to you as a way out of the problems that you had today and will get up to face tomorrow? Is there opportunity, is there work today, is there assurance for tomorrow, is this the practical definite answer you are looking for? Most important of all, is there even a recognition in that type of panacea of the fact that the youth of America has any problems at all?

No, my friends, you have a right to expect something better than that. You have a right to expect that those in authority will do everything within their power to help restore conditions that make employment and opportunity possible; more than that, that you will be protected, insofar as is humanly possible, from the physical and mental and spiritual ravages of economic and social maladjustment.

Finds Fewer Jobs Available Today.

Some counselors say "confidence and normal prosperity will cure everything—give everybody jobs." They generally mean by that the confidence and prosperity of 1928. But, my friends, 1928 was no millennium. You and I know the simple fact that while production was increasing and profits were increasing in 1928 and 1929, unemployment was growing at an astounding rate. Return to the 1928 kind of prosperity is no sufficient answer. The best that the captains of the country could do for you before the depression was not good enough and it is not good enough today.

And you and I know now that while the total production of America is about back to the high point before the depression, only a little over 80 per cent as many human beings are engaged in turning out that production. It does not matter very greatly what the cause of this is. It may be a greater efficiency; it may be the development of new machinery; it may be a variety of other causes. We cannot legislate against greater efficiency, nor can we legislate against the use of new tools—nor would we if we could. But the fact remains. And that fact requires an answer.

Some people tell you that even with a completely restored prosperity there will be a vast permanent army of unemployed. I do not accept that. No man who is sensitive to human values dares to accept it. That is why we are not content, merely, to restore what is sometimes called prosperity. We propose to attack the problem from every conceivable angle.

We readily admit that a greater purchasing power, far more widely distributed, will mean the consumption of more goods—industrial products and farm products. The production of these goods will mean more employment. Most business men believe with us in a greater purchasing power on the part of more people; they know that their businesses will be helped thereby.

To work in unity toward this end constitutes one form of attack and there are others which we must not overlook.

Our working population increases every year, both because of population increase and because more and more women are working for wages. That is as it should be. But when we face your problems these increases raise the question as to whether it is not possible and right to limit the active working ages at both ends.

We in your Government are seeking to extend the school age in every State in the Union and to make it easier for boys and girls to stay in school. Work out for yourself what would happen if all the boys and all the girls of 14 and 15 and 16 and 17 who are now working in industry, found it possible to stay in school until they were at least 18 years old. How many jobs would that give the young people of the Nation who have graduated from high school and from college? And how much better equipped would be these youngsters who are now at work if they could stay in school to the completion of their education?

In the same way, ask yourselves how many jobs would be created if the great majority of people who are now over 65—to take a figure at random—were in a position to retire in security for the balance of their days on earth. And how much greater happiness would such security give to their old age?

Calls Shorter Hours An Answer to Problem.

And there is another angle of re-employment which from the point of view of youth, is worth pursuing. I will point it by an illustration. In a certain manufacturing industry the average hours of weekly work were greatly curtailed under the operation of the national industrial recovery act, and, curtailed, incidentally, with the complete support of the great majority of employers within the industry. When this act came to an end the average hours of work were 36.4 per week. Since that time the great majority of employers in this particular industry continued the old NRA scale of hours. But gradually, first a few and then a larger number of employers began lengthening the work week. The result today is that the average of employment in this industry is 39.9 hours per week. Not a serious difference you say. And yet if you figure it out on the assumption that there were 166,300 men and women in this industry, 10 per cent, or 16,650 people have either lost their jobs or, by working longer hours, are preventing 16,650 other people from getting employment. Actually, the records show that 1,400 people lost their jobs and 15,250 other people were kept from getting work.

It seems reasonable, therefore, that industry can contribute in great measure to the increase of employment if industry as a whole will undertake reasonable reductions of hours of work per week, while, at the same time, they keep the average individual's pay envelope at least as large as it is today.

Because the practices of employment definitely affect the problem of unemployment, the government must give and will give consideration to such subjects as the length of the working week, the stability of employment on an annual basis, and the payment of at least adequate minimum wages. A government doing that is a government that is working actively at the answers to your problem.

We do not yet know enough in a changing economic order to guarantee any nation permanently against times of depression. We believe, however, that steps, like these, which we have taken and are taking will at least greatly cushion depressions—will prevent the up-curve from rushing to a violent, mad peak of false prosperity and prevent another violent, mad descent into another sink of suffering and disillusionment like the one from which for the last 3½ years we have been surely emerging.

And there is another aspect to the answer which you have a right to expect from us. What do we propose to do about the casualties of depression? Since 1929 those casualties, in America, have run into the millions. They are a charge upon us as a people. I have recognized that fact. And, by every reasonable means, we have sought to care for those casualties—to keep them from the physical suffering of hunger; to keep them from the mental suffering of a loss of morale.

In regard to all these problems there are counselors these days who say: "Do nothing;" other counselors who say: "Do everything." Common sense dictates an avoidance of both extremes. I say to you "do something;" and when you have done that something, if it works, do it some more, and if it does not work do something else.

Agrees With View Action Is Needed.

And you young people want action. You believe, as I believe, that the something which needs to be done, can be done. And how significantly American it is to believe that.

The vigor of our history comes, largely, from the fact that, as a comparatively young nation we have gone fearlessly ahead doing things that were never done before. We subdued a wilderness that men said could never be conquered. We established a civilization where others insisted a civilization could not survive. Between 1776 and 1789 we built a government for which, in the extent of its democracy, there was no precedent—a government which, Royalists declared could not endure.

We did all these things with zest. The very air was exhilirating. We were young—and we were getting things—worthwhile things—done. It is part of the spirit of America to believe that now, in our day, we can do equally well in getting things done.

I, for one, do not believe that the era of the pioneer is at an end; I only believe that the area for pioneering has changed. The period of geographical pioneering is largely finished. But, my friends, the period of social pioneering is only at its beginning. And make no mistake about it—the same qualities of heroism and faith and vision that were required to bring the forces of nature into subjection will be required—in even greater measure—to bring under proper control the forces of modern society. There is a task which for importance and for magnitude calls for the best that you and I have to offer.

There cannot be too many Americans thinking about the future of America. Our country, richly endowed in body, mind and spirit, still has need of many things. But I am certain that one of its chief needs today is the releasing and the enlistment of the spirit of youth.

Do not underestimate the significance of that spirit. Yesterday Christendom celebrated Easter, the anniversary of the resurrection of our Lord, Who, at the beginning of His ministry, was 30 years of age and at His death was only 33. Christianity began with youth and through the last 2,000 years the spirit of youth repeatedly has revitalized it.

Our war for independence was a young man's crusade. Age was on the side of the Tories and the Tories were on the side of the old order. At the Revolution's outbreak George Washington was 43; Patrick Henry, 38; Thomas Jefferson, 32, and Alexander Hamilton, 18. Our Constitution, likewise, was the creation of young minds. The average age of the men who wrote the Constitution was about 44. The qualities of youth are not of a sort that self-satisfied people welcome in 1936 any more than self-satisfied people welcomed them in 1776. I have used the words "the qualities of youth." Be wise enough and tolerant enough, you who are young in years, to remember that millions of older people have kept and propose to keep these qualities of youth. You ought to thank God tonight if, regardless of your years, you are young enough in spirit to dream dreams and see visions—dreams and visions about a greater and a finer America that is to be. If you are young enough in spirit to believe that poverty can be greatly lessened; that the disgrace of involuntary unemployment can be wiped out; that class hatreds can be done away with; that peace at home and abroad can be maintained; and that one day a generation may possess this land, blessed beyond anything we now know, with those things—material and spiritual—that make man's life abundant. If that is the fashion of your dreaming then I say "Hold fast to your dream. America needs it."

with production and profits increasing, unemployment was growing at an "astounding rate," he asserted.

"The best that the captains of the country could do for you before the depression was not good enough then and it is not good enough today," he declared.

20 Per Cent Permanently Jobless.

Mr. Roosevelt pointed out that although production in America "is about back to the high point before the depression, only a little over 80 per cent as many human beings are engaged in turning out that production." The cause is not a matter of importance, it is the fact which requires an answer, he said.

"Some people tell you that even with a completely restored prosperity there will be a vast permanent army of unemployed," asserted the President, and then more emphatically: "I do not accept that. No man who is sensitive to human values dares to accept it. That is why we are not content merely to restore what is sometimes called prosperity. We propose to attack the problem from every conceivable angle."

Mr. Roosevelt said he readily admitted that a greater purchasing power would mean the consumption of more goods, with an increase in employment. Pointing out that business men generally favored a wider distribution of purchasing power, the President declared that "to work in unity toward this end constitutes one form of attack"—but he held there were others.

The country's working population increases yearly, the President declared, both because of population increase and because of an increase of women working for wages. He did not object to that, but held these factors raised the question whether it is not possible to limit active working ages at both ends.

Seeks Longer School Age.

He said that the Federal Government was seeking to extend the school age in every State and trying to make it easier for young people to stay in school. Without specifically saying so, he intimated that the problem might also be alleviated by old-age pensions for those over 65 years.

It was then that the President sought to illustrate his description of how the unemployment problem could be attacked by citing the increase of working hours in a certain industry since the demise of NRA and to declare he was considering ways of achieving a shortened work week in industry.

Mr. Roosevelt said that methods had not yet been found for preventing economic depressions, but added that he believed steps such as those he had outlined which he said "we have taken and are taking, will at least greatly cushion depressions—will prevent the up-curve from rushing to a violent, mad peak of false prosperity and prevent another violent, mad descent into another sink of suffering and disillusionment."

Asserting that he had recognized the obligation of the Government to take care of the "casualties of the depression" against hunger and the loss of morals, the President declared his policy had spurned both the counselors of "do nothing" and those of "do everything."

I say to you, "do something," he declared. "And when you have done that something, if it works, do it some more; and if it does not work, do something else."

Mr. Roosevelt lauded the young people who "want action" and asserted he, as they, believed "that the something which needs to be done can be done"—and he added, "how significantly American it is to believe that!"

Social Pioneering.

Referring to the vigor and zest which marked the early settlement and development of the country, Mr. Roosevelt declared that he did not believe that "the era of the pioneer is at an end; I only believe that the era of pioneering has changed." While the era of "geographical pioneering" is largely finished, he continued, "the period of social pioneering is only at its beginning." The same qualities of heroism and faith and vision that were required to subject Nature will be required, he asserted, "to bring under proper control the forces of modern society." He admonished that there could not be too many Americans thinking about America's future—and in that task the spirit of youth is needed, said the President.

He recalled that the war for independence was a "young man's crusade" with "age on the side of the Tories and the Tories on the side of the old order." And so it is today, he continued, since "the qualities of youth are not of a sort that self-satisfied people welcome in 1936 any more than self-satisfied people welcomed them in 1776."

The President in conclusion brought his audience to its feet cheering as he admonished youth to be tolerant, but to dream dreams and see visions about a greater and finer America that is to be, one in which poverty will be lessened, unemployment wiped out, class hatreds done away with, and with peace at home and abroad.

Assails Size of Entourage.

Baltimore, April 13 (AP).—Thomas F. Cadwalader, a leader of the anti-Roosevelt Democrats in Maryland, tonight criticized the size and type of entourage which accompanied President Roosevelt to Baltimore to open his campaign for renomination.

The President had barely arrived when Cadwalader issued a statement saying the other visitors constituted "an obvious effort to impress and overawe us." Cadwalader, campaign manager for Henry Breckinridge, who is opposing Roosevelt in the Maryland primary, said his group would present a reply to the Roosevelt speech "in due time."

Breckinridge's campaign manager said:

"If Mr. Roosevelt were coming into Maryland simply as a candidate he would be welcomed as a distinguished guest in accordance with our best traditions. But when he comes flanked by the representatives of all the most powerful departments and bureaus of the vast Federal governmental machine in an obvious effort to impress us and overawe us with its power, he cannot make the same claim on Maryland hospitality."

Illinois Center Of Fight Today For G.O.P. Vote

Borah-Knox Clash Holds Political Interest of Whole Nation.

Political interest of the country centers today on the State-wide primary election in Illinois.

Senator William E. Borah and Col. Frank Knox, in their battle there for the Republican Presidential nomination, will clash for the first time, both seeking the State's 57 delegates to the Cleveland nominating convention. The primary will not bind the delegates, but is eagerly awaited to show the relative strength of the two rival candidates. Illinois is the home State of Col. Knox, Chicago publisher, and also is the native State of the Idaho Senator.

Senator Borah returned to Washington yesterday after stumping the State for four days. He declined to predict the outcome of the voting today, declaring that experienced political leaders in Illinois are "just as much at sea" as he is.

Col. Knox wound up his speaking tour last night at Chicago with an attack on New Deal "waste of public money," which he charged "was governed by New Deal political desires rather than by public needs," according to the Associated Press. He did not refer to Senator Borah, but asserted that to the "people who want nothing more than they themselves earn" he was offering "the chance to make it true that what they build for themselves or the Nation, they can keep."

Horner Opposed.

Interest in the Illinois voting extended to the Democratic gubernatorial campaign, in which Gov. Henry Horner, rejected by the regular organization headed by Mayor Edward J. Kelly of Chicago, is opposed by Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, Chicago health commissioner. The campaign has been a bitter one.

In the Republican gubernatorial race seven candidates, including former Gov. Len Small, are competing.

For the Republican senatorial nomination former Senator Otis F. Glenn nad former Representative William E. Hull are the candidates. Senator James Hamilton Lewis has two opponents for the Democratic nomination.

Nebraska also holds its primary today, but there is little to attract interest there. President Roosevelt is unopposed in the Democratic Presidential primary and Senator Borah has no opposition on the Republican ballot. Delegates are not bound by the preferential vote.

A fetaure of the election will be the effort to nominate Senator George W. Norris on both tickets by voters writing in his name. He declined to file for renomination. Four others seek the Democratic nomination and four are after the Republican nomination, the latter including former Represetnative Robert G. Simmons.

There were other campaign developments yesterday.

Appointment of L. W. Robert, jr., former assistant secretary of the treasury, as assistant treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, was announced. It also was announced that Treasurer Walter J. Cummings' duties with the Continental Illinois Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago "confine him very largely to that territory. Mr. Robert will also assist W. Forbes Morgan, Secretary to the National Committee, in the issuance of books commemorating the National Convention in Cleveland.

Farley Comments.

James A. Farley, chairman of the Democratic Committee, returned from Bermuda, and commented on the Liberty League:

"The more they work, the happier we are."

At Baltimore, where he attended the Jefferson birthday rally where President Roosevelt spoke, he declared the president will get more electoral votes this year than he did in 1932.

Gov. Ed C. Johnson, leader of the conservative wing of the Democratic Party in Colorado, announced his candidacy for the seat now held by Senator Edward P. Costigan, liberal Democrat, who has announced that because of ill health he will not seek re-election.

Meanwhile, the Prohibition Party perfected plans for its national convention at Niagara Falls, N. Y., next month. Edward E. Blake, chairman of the national committee, announced at Chicago that D. Leigh Colvin, possible Presidential candidate, had been named keynoter for the session. Also mentioned as possibilities for the Presidential nomination, according to the Associated Press, were former William D. Upshaw, of Georgia; Clinton N. Howard, Rochester, N. Y., and Will D. Martin, of New Jersey.

Further Funds In Phone Probe Up to Roosevelt

By the Associated Press.

Communications Commission officials said yesterday the President probably would be asked to decide whether additional funds should be sought to continue the $750,000 F. C. C. investigation of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The commission already has spent about $335,000, officials said, and unless Congress appropriates an additional sum the investigation will end July 1.

For the present appropriation, it was said, public hearings on activities of the huge utility can be continued intermittently for only two more months.

Thus far, Commissioner Paul A. Walker, directing the investigation, has made no direct request for more funds. In a report to Congress, however, he said that if all phases of A. T. & T. operations were to be investigated, another appropriation would be needed.

Other F. C. C. officials said there was sentiment within the commission for continuance of the inquiry, but that the whole question probably would be placed before Mr. Roosevelt before any request for funds was sent to Congress.

The President's advice would be asked, it was said, because continuance of the probe might be considered to reflect general Administration policies. Public hearings in the inquiry are scheduled to reopen April 20, when testimony will be taken to lay the groundwork for a broad study of A. T. & T. rates.

These hearings are expected to center on the company's methods of figuring depreciation, the cost of manufacturing telephone equipment, and whether unnecessary telephone plant facilities have been included in estimates of value for rate-making purposes.

The nature of A. T. & T. "license contracts" with operating companies of the Bell System also will be considered. These contracts provide that a certain portion of revenues received by operating companies shall go to the A. T. & T. in return for services to the operating organizations.

The commission already has conducted a detailed study of the company's lobby activities and its leasing of long-distance lines to racing news companies.

A staff of more than 200 attorneys, accountants, and clerks has been studying the A. T. & T. records in New York several months. This basic study constitutes the heaviest drain on the commission's investigating funds.

Thurston Dies in Florida

Charleston, W. Va., and was unable to rejoin his company. His daughter carried on while he sought to regain health. Another hemorrhage here March 30 weakened him.

Earlier—last December 13—he said he had performed his greatest trick—"I've recaptured my health." But his hopes were greater than his strength and he had to stay close to his apartment.

Said He Would Reach 100.

It may have been that he was trying to impress his much-younger bride, but Howard Thurston, on May 25 last, in New York, boasted that he had a trick which would fool even death.

He predicted that he would live to be 100.

Thurston had just married his second wife, the former Pauline Mark, 27-year-old divorcee. Fifteen years before, while appearing in Chicago, he had called a young girl to the stage and changed a box of candy into a white rabbit before her startled eyes. The girl was Pauline Mark. He gave her the rabbit, and when he played Chicago early in 1935 she went backstage to visit him, and later they were married.

Trick of Remaining Young.

"I'm really 65 by the calendar," Thurston said the day after the wedding. "But that's all wrong. I'm only 40."

He said that while in India 30 years ago he had learned a Hindu trick of remaining young. The secret, he said, involved the mind, the spinal column and blood circulation. It was this, he said, that would let him live to be 100.

There may have been greater magicians in history than Thurston, but certainly none was better known. He performed his magic in virtually every part of the civilized world, and in some parts that hardly could be called civilized.

In 1900, as the "King of Cards," he went to Europe and in an impromptu exhibition in Copenhagen entertained four monarchs. They were King Christian of Denmark, King Edward VII of England, King George of Greece and the Czar of Russia.

Thurston had delighted the powerful rulers by producing from "nowhere" four kings. When asked to produce a fifth he did so.

Among his other patrons were the Emperor of Japan, the Emperor and Empress Dowager of China, the Sultan of Java, the Kin of Siam, all the royal heads of India, the Shah of Persia, the Sultan of Turkey and many crowned heads in Europe.

He also entertained many American Presidents, and one of them, the economical Coolidge, got a shock when Thurston, in a trick, made it appear he had destroyed his gold watch.

Thurston went around the world four times, dazzling an estimated 50,000,000 persons here and abroad with his card tricks, but never playing bridge or poker.

"If I play and don't win, they think I am a bad magician," he once explained. "If I play and win they think I cheated."

Born at Columbus, Ohio, July 20, 1869, the son of William and Mary (Cloud) Thurston, the man who was to astound the world with his magic was expected to become a clergyman.

At an early age he came upon a book of magic and was fascinated. However, he kept his promise to study for the ministry. After being graduated from Mount Hermon Aacdemy in Massachusetts, he enrolled for the University of Pennsylvania.

While waiting for the opening of the fall semester, he went to the Burnham Industrial Farm at Caanan, N. Y., which was headed by a famous reformer, W. M. F. Round.

Followed Herrmann.

How Thurston, while on his way to the University of Pennsylvania, saw Herrmann at the station in Albany, decided to follow him to Syracuse, and then abandoned the ministry for magic has been told.

He started by selling razor blades on the street, employing his card tricks as a "come-on." Then came a few hard years of small-time vaudeville, until one day when he found that his "rising card" trick had made him a star.

At first he used a water glass, out of which any card you wanted would rise into the air seemingly unaided. He was working in a Montana mining town one night and a drunken miner shot at the glass and broke it. Thurston grabbed the entire pack of cards and right there learned how to do the trick without using the glass. The cards simply began floating in the air. Fame and fortune were before him.

A pack of cards and a few knicknacks were all Thurston carried in the beginning. Toward the end his paraphernalia filled three baggage cars.

Like Houdini and others, Thurston guarded his secrets jealously. All of his lore, it is believed, will go to his daughter, Jane, who had been his assistant for a number of years. She already understands most of his illusions, including the one in which he appeared to cut a woman in half, the woman in the case being his wife.

In his biography, "My Life of Magic," Thurston told how, while appearing at the Shubert-Belasco Theater here, he arranged to give a private performance for President and Mrs. Coolidge and some friends in the east room of the White House.

Thurston learned that the Massachusetts Legislature had presented Coolidge with a beautiful watch. From a description obtained from an official at the White House, Thurston had a copy made. This he turned over to an assistant.

In the east room, Thurston, promising to do a trick that thrilled the Amir of Afganistan, asked that some gentleman lend him a watch. Six offered theirs, but Thurston stalled until Coolidge had extended his own.

The assistant took it and dropped it into a bag. Here he made a mistake. He should have dropped the imitation Coolidge watch. Thurston, however, did not know of the mistake, nor at first did the assistant know of it.

Error Was Averted.

Thurston came to the climax of the trick. He raised a heavy hammer and was about to smash the watch into smithereens when the assistant, realizing his mistake, grabbed his arm. The hammer was halted in mid-air.

Thurston cleverly began the trick all over again, this time making sure that the cheap watch was substituted. While he smashed this with the hammer, the assistant was hiding Coolidge's watch in a loaf of bread.

The loaf was turned over to Mrs. Coolidge and she was asked to burrow for her husband's watch.

"Please be careful, Mrs. Coolidge," Thurston said.

"Yes, dear, be careful!" pleaded the President.

How a Baby GROWS

By Dr. Arnold Gesell, M. D.

PREHENSION (reaching and grasping): He co-ordinates his eyes, steadies his head, balances his body and lays hold of things. At 12 weeks, the baby merely notices the block. At 16 weeks, he tries to contact the block, but fails. He is able to grasp the block at 24 weeks and grasps and holds both blocks at 28 weeks. In the fifth picture, he is shown readily handling one block after another at 52 weeks. TOMORROW: Manipulation.

Argentine Doctor Wears Bullet Taken From Heart

Dr. Miguel Sussini's Unusual Ornament Shown at Secretary and Mrs. Hull's Tea to Delegates of Pan-American Health Conference.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Dr. Miguel Sussini, of the Argentine, wore the most unusual ornament of any guest at the tea given yesterday by the Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull at the Carlton Hotel for delegates to the third Pan-American Conference of National Directors of Health and the members of the Directing Council of the Pan-American Sanitary Bureau. It was a bullet on the end of his watch chain—a bullet he removed from a man's heart 12 years ago, and the man is still living.

There were countless stories, colorful with courage and romance which an interested listener could gather yesterday in conversations with the guests of honor. Not all of them spoke English but Dr. Sussini was one who did. His name, Miguel, he explained, is the same as that of St. Michael, who slew the dragon. His own feat has been heralded as a miracle of medical science. He is president of the Argentine Association of Surgery and is also active in the government, having been speaker of the House of Representatives of his country.

From Washington, Dr. Sussini will go to Johns Hopkins on Friday to spend a week or ten days and then to Harvard University and finally to New York, sailing for South America from there on May 15.

Another guest at the tea was Dr. Arnold Gabaldon, a specialist in the public health service of Venezuela, who has the distinction of being the youngest man at the conference. He is familiar with Washington, having been graduated at Johns Hopkins University.

Studies Life in Mountains.

Dr. Carlos Monge, of Peru, occupies a high place in the medical world in more senses than one. He is making a study of the biological character of the people—5,000,000 of whom live from 14,000 to 15,000 feet above sea level in Peru and the same number at that altitude in Bolivia. Although his headquarters are in Lima, he goes to the mountains to conduct his research, and his findings will be included in a report of the international committee for the study of high altitudes, of Harvard University.

The first Spanish child to survive was born 58 years after the first Spaniards went to the high plateaus, he disclosed in his research. This was in 1585, he says, and the event was called the "Miracle of St. Nicholas." The child and hundreds of others since have been named Nicholas in the village of Potosi, where the first Spanish child was born.

The Incas had observed the effect of the altitude on men, says Dr. Monge, and maintained two armies, which they sent from the mountains to sea level alternately for several months at a time so they could become acclimated. Their plan of colonization was called in their language "mitimaes," or interior colonization. Whenever a section was conquered, Incas from a place of similar character were sent to colonize it, or if they came from a different climate or altitude they remained only long enough to plant their crops, and then returned to harvest them.

Brazilian Health Head Attends.

Another distinguished guest was Dr. J. de Barros Bareto, director general of public health in Brazil. The Brazilian health service is similar to that of the United States, he says, except that the federal department also serves as the health department for the capital city, Rio de Janeiro, maintaining there a health service which has become a model for other cities of Brazil. Dr. Bareto's particular interest is research, and he was director of the technical division of the health service before he became director general.

Dr. Jose Siurob, Surgeon General of Mexico, and Senora Siurob, also were present, as were Dr. Waldemar Coutts, the Chilean delegate, and Senora Coutts. Senora Siurob wore a gray costume—dress, hat and shoes of the same shade, the hat trimmed with bright flowers. Senora Coutts wore a black hat and gown, which were striking with her fair hair.

Mrs. Hull was dressed in a gown of black lace, with which she wore a large black hat and a necklace of pearls. She was assisted by Mrs. Herbert Feis, wife of the economic adviser of the State Department; Miss Jennie Moore, sister of the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. R. Walton Moore; Mrs. Keith Merrill, Brs. Julius Holmes, Mrs. Harry McBride and Mrs. Edward Wales, who alternated at the tea table.

Others present were the Ambassador of Argentina, Senor Don Felipe A. Espil; Senorita Marta Trucco, Senorita Graciela Trucco and Senorita Rebecca Trucco, daughters of the Ambassador of Chile, Senor Don Manuel Trucco; the Ambassador of Cuba, Senor Dr. Guillermo Patterson with his son-in-law and daughter; the Attache of the Legation of Switzerland and Mme. Schlatter, the latter wearing a navy blue coat, brimmed hat and a luxurious fox fur; the Ambassador of Mexico and Senora de Castillo Najero; the Minister of Guatemala and Senora de Recinos, the Minister of the Dominican Republic and Senora de Pastoriza, the Attorney General and Mrs. Homer Cummings, the latter wearing a blue crepe dress with a waist-length fur cape and a blue straw hat with flowers perched on the curving brim; Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis, wife of Senator Lewis, in a blue knitted suit with a silver fox fur and wearing a brimmed hat trimmed with flowers.

French Youth to Have White House Birthday

Ambassador of Goodwill Will Have 15 Candles on Cake Tonight; Todhunter School Girls to Be Mrs. Roosevelt's Guests.

By Vylla Poe Wilson.

Today, his fifteenth birthday, will probably always linger in the memory of Bernard Maine de Boissiere, French Boy Scout, who will arrive late this afternoon to be an overnight guest at the White House.

The White House dinner table will be graced this evening with a snow-white cake with 15 lighted candles in honor of the birthday of the youthful French ambassador of goodwill, and tonight he will occupy one of the most imposing of the White House bedrooms.

Mrs. Roosevelt invited the members of her press conference yesterday morning to accompany her on a tour of the White House grounds, where thousands of Washington youngsters were making merry at the annual Easter egg-rolling festivities.

The First Lady did not stop for a hat or coat. She slipped out of the White House through the executive offices and had nearly reached the grandstand in the middle of the grounds before the milling crowd of women and children, in their bright Easter clothes, knew she had come out of the Executive Mansion. Mrs. Roosevelt wore a jumper suit of bright red woolen material with a white silk guimpe.

Six members of the graduating class of Todhunter School in New York will be week-end guests at the White House. They will go on a sightseeing tour led by Mrs. Roosevelt on Saturday. The girls have expressed a desire to see G. Edgar Hoover and G-Men of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, so that will be one of the first places Mrs. Roosevelt and the Todhunter students will visit.

If the request is made, Mrs. Roosevelt is willing to be fingerprinted. As the G-Men always ask for the fingerprints of all visitors, there is no doubt that the fingerprints of the wife of the President will be on file at the bureau very shortly. Mrs. Roosevelt will send the Todhunter graduates to Congress to see what it looks like, but does not expect them to stay long unless there is an exciting debate.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt motored to Baltimore last night for the rally of the Young Democrats.

Tomorrow Mrs. Roosevelt will attend the annual breakfast of the Women's National Democratic Club. The members of the National Society of Daughters of Founders and Patriots will be entertained at tea in the afternoon.

The composers' group of the National League of American Pen Women will be Mrs. Roosevelt's guests at tea Friday afternoon.

Saturday night she will attend a meeting on housing arranged by Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, of the Washington Cathedral.

Miss Eleanor Roosevelt and Mr. Daniel Roosevelt, niece and nephew of Mrs. Roosevelt, and their stepfather, Mr. John Cutter, who have been Easter guests at the White House, left for their home in Boston last night.

Miss Elsie Clapp, superintendent of the Rural School at Reedsville, was an Easter guest at the White House and attended Mrs. Roosevelt's press conference yesterday morning.

Miss Murray, Mr. De Marco Are Wed Here

Easter Lilies Form Setting for Ceremony at Holy Trinity Church.

Miss Margaret Marie Murray, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Murray, and Mr. Joseph P. De Marco, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Liberto P. De Marco, were married yesterday at 5 p. m. in Holy Trinity Church, the Rev. Henry J. Nelles officiating.

The altar was decorated with Easter lilies against a background of palms and ferns. Mr. Glen W. Ashley, organist played the wedding music.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was gowned in a Lanvin model of white angelskin lace, with high cowl neckline, long fitted sleeves, and a long, full circular train. Her veil was of white tulle with a pleated halo caught with orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses and lilies of the valley.

Miss Mary Murray, sister of the bride, was her maid of honor and only attendant. Her gown was of citron marquisette with fitted bodice, high neckline and full circular flared skirt, trimmed with self-color taffeta over a taffeta slip. She wore a peach-colored garden hat of horsehair braid and carried a bouquet of talisman roses.

Mr. John Sherman was the best man and the ushers were Mr. Carmon P. De Marco, brother of the bridegroom; Mr. John S. Jacobsen, Mr. Rudolph W. Worch and Mr. John I. Kirby, all of Washington.

A reception at the home of the bride's parents on Tunlaw road followed the ceremony. The house was decorated with spring flowers. Mrs. Murray, who wore a navy and dubonnet flowered chiffon dress with matching accessories and shoulder bouquet of yellow tea roses, assisted the young couple in receiving, as did Mr. De Marco's two sisters-in-law, Mrs. John M. De Marco, gowned in pearl gray lace, and Mrs. Carmon P. De Marco, gowned in pale blue chiffon.

Later Mr. and Mrs. De Marco left for a wedding trip to Southern Pines. The bride wore a nile green suit with brown accessories and a shoulder bouquet of yellow tea roses. After May 15 the young couple will be at home at 3929 W street northwest.

Among out-of-town guests for the wedding were: Mr. Joseph De Marco, of Baltimore; Mr. T. Everett Kent and Mrs. Royal A. Wolverton, of New York City; and Mr. Francis O. Geiger, of Irvington, N. J.

Pen Women to Hold Composers Concert

The League of American Pen Women will have as guests of honor at its composers concert tomorrow night Mrs. Ruth Ottaway, assistant to the director, Dr. Nikolai Sokoloff, of the WPA Federal Music Project. The concert will be in the small ballroom of the Willard Hotel.

Other honor guests for this concert of American women composers will be the outgoing national president of the league, Mrs. Victoria Faber Stevenson; Mrs. Roberta Campbell Lawson, national president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and Mrs. Dorothy DeMuth Watson.

Mrs. Thatcher Hoyt (Phyllis Fergus, national music chairman), of Chicago, has arranged a program of original works of women composers, with music by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, dean of American women composers; Mrs. Clifford Caldwell (Charlotte Caldwell), of Chicago; Marianne Genet, Bonita Crowe, Iris Brussels, and others. The fairy story operetta for children, with which the Thatcher Hoyt award was won by Dorothy Radde Emery, of Maryland, whom Washington claims as composer, also will be presented.

Pola Fotitch Marks Birtday With Party

The hostess' young guests included a number of the sons and daughters of members of the Diplomatic Corps and a group of kindergarten classmates at the Sacred Heart Convent. The guests numbered about 25.

Mrs. Biddle, Visitor Here, To Aid in Poetry Recital

Mrs. Francis Biddle, known in literary circles as Katherine Garrison Chapin, will arrive tomorrow morning to be a guest of Mrs. Herbert J. Slocum, of 2131 R street.

Tomorrow at 5 p. m. Mrs. Biddle will assist Mr. Harold Vinal in a poetry recital at the Phillips Memorial Gallery.

Leonora Curtin Here for Easter Visit At Home of Mrs. George Barnett

Student of Archaeology Tells of Her Work in New Mexico.

Miss Leonora Curtin, who arrived yesterday to be the guest of Mrs. George Barnett, 1622 Rhode Island avenue, for several weeks, is a young woman of so many interests she describes herself as "living the life of about five persons."

She spends her summers in Santa Fe, N. Mex., and part of her winters in Pasadena, Calif., in each of which she has a home. She devotes some of her time to archaeology, to the collection of early folk songs of the Mexicans and American Indians, which she has had recorded and some of which have been transcribed; to the study of Indian ethnology, to the writing of poetry and to the unique shop she has maintained in Santa Fe for the past three years.

Any one of Miss Curtin's pursuits might be worth a separate account, but that which is most important to her and to others is the shop through which she has provided employment for nearly 300 persons who otherwise would be dependent on relief.

Open Three Years.

Three years ago in June she opened the shop for the sale of articles made by the Spanish-Americans of the section, people who are descendants of the early Spaniards and who have preserved some of their ancient traditions.

"The very old and the very young are the workers who supply the articles handled in the shop," said Miss Curtin. "The old people know weaving and carving and other crafts and the young are eagerly learning. We have the cooperation of the State vocational schools in giving them instruction and the schools have also had the assistance of private funds.

"It is wonderful to see these people doing the things they enjoy and supporting themselves. It is not only providing for their material needs, but is restoring to them some of the pride in their traditions, which was taken from them when the American settlers entered the territory as conquerors. They have an art and craftsmanship of their own, surviving from the early days when the Spanish came there.

"They spin and weave, using pure vegetable dyes for their yarn. They are making furniture of a modified Spanish design, and are doing tin work which, has been developed more in New Mexico than in any other part of this continent. I have had the problem of adapting their work to modern usage to make it salable. In tin, they make mirror frames and lighting fixtures, for instance.

"One of the most interesting examples of rehabilitation which has been accomplished through the aid of the shop is that of a woodcarver who had been making images of saints. He sold them to natives and tourists, but would sell perhaps not more than six in a year. His family was hungry and he had no prospect of increasing the revenue his woodcarving brought.

"In an effort to adapt his work to public demand, I suggested the making of trays and had him taught to do it. The first trays, over which he spent much time and effort, were quite costly, but contrary to usual custom, as he became more proficient, he charged less for making them and supplied so large a demand, he was able to buy himself a car and a small house in less than a year."

Her Shop Assists 300 Spanish-Americans to Gain Income.

Miss Joan Dunnigan Weds Mr. Baetzner

Couple Leaves on Motor Trip After Ceremony.

The marriage of Miss Rosemary Joan Dunnigan, of this city, and Mr. Willard Herbert Baetzner, of Millburn, N. J., took place yesterday morning in the rectory of St. Peter's Catholic Church, the Rev. Paul L. Norris officiating.

The bride was attired in a gray and plum ensemble and her flowers were sweetheart roses and lilies of the valley. She was attended by her sister, Miss Regis Dunnigan. Mr. Karl Edward Baetzner, brother of the bridegroom, was best man.

Mrs. Baetzner is the daughter of Mrs. John Patrick Dunnigan and the late Dr. Dunnigan. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Karl C. Baetzner, of this city and Rochester, N. Y.

After a motor tour through the Pocono Mountains, Mr. and Mrs. Baetzner will be at home in Milburn where Mr. Baetzner is advertising manager of the Millburn-Short Hills Item.

New Powder Put on Over Make-Up Gives Face Angel-Skin Finish.

By Mignon.

There is always something new in the cosmetic line. One of the trickiest and I think, perhaps, one of the most intelligently thought out products has just now put in an appearance and is making a great appeal to fastidious women. It is a face powder that is put on over all other make-up.

You know this soft, angel-skin cloth and ribbon that had such a vogue recently—well, this finishing powder gives the skin that same angel-skin texture that the material had. Once your face is made up to suit you, a thin layer of this powder puts on the cameo-like finish that makes everybody exclaim—"What a complexion!"

I believe this is the first time that I have ever heard of anything of this kind and I doubt if anyone has ever made one like it before. The woman who manufactures it is a genius for thinking of things that women should have to make themselves lovelier. She is lovely herself, and when she had the inspiration for this finishing powder it was nothing less than a stroke of genius.

Advice to Child On All Problems Not Best Course

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

"MY CHILDREN tell me everything."

Some mothers can say this with perfect truthfulness. There are parents, not many, to be sure, whose children bare their hearts to them with utter frankness. At times, indeed, the frankness is devastating, for it puts the adults in the uncomfortable position of knowing too much, not only about their own children, but also about other people's.

Proud of Confidence.

The mothers who thus are admitted behind the scenes, as it were, are, of course, proud of the unusual confidence reposed in them. They welcome all the news that is spread out before them, and from the vantage point of age hand down advice and opinions with a pleasing sense of power.

Occasionally there exists a human being who is qualified for such a role, but fortunately they are rare. As a rule it is better for both mother and children to observe the decent reticences of life. The children must learn to face their problems and manage their lives without help. They are shirking responsibility when they pour out their hearts to their mother. They are not aware of this, but they do get a feeling of relief from confiding their troubles, and also a sense of responsibility shared if not entirely transferred to someone else.

Can Refuse to Comment.

It is hard of course to resist the flattery of being "in the know." No mother is going to refuse to listen to what her children tell her. But she can refuse to comment or to give advice. She can put the burden of decision and the responsibility of solving the problem up to the child.

She also can explain to the child what she is doing and why. To eliminate herself in this way, requires great self-control on the mother's part, but will, in the long run, help the child far more than "talking it over."

Shaking Palsy May Be Caused By Influenza

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

When that troublesome state of affairs known as Parkinson's disease (shaking palsy) was described by James Parkinson in 1817 it was far less common than it is today. In his original essay Parkinson noted that the condition had been observed by earlier writers, but was not thought to be due to a disease. We now know that infections involving the brain—encephalitis, meningitis, etc.—may be attended with a sequence of distressing symptoms. Until recent years but few cases were observed until after the fifth decade of life, when it was often associated with senile changes.

Signs May Be General.

Encephalitis, commonly called sleeping sickness, is far more prevalent now, although it has been known for at least two centuries.

The early signs may be general, including lassitude, headache and fatigue of the muscles with tremors. The part of the body first affected is usually the right hand, where a characteristic movement of the thumb over the other fingers (pill-rolling) may be observed. Trembling, which may come on periodically, gradually spreads to the arm and then to the leg of the same side of the body.

Speech becomes monotonous, difficulty in writing increases, and the profuse secretion of saliva may become troublesome (drooling at the mouth).

Patients' Reactions Differ.

For some time the tremor and rigidity have been attacked with hyoscine, tincture of stramonium, and extract of the parathyroid glands. Recently atropine—a drug closely allied to stramonium—has been used because these patients are strikingly less sensitive to its effects than are normal individuals. The drug is usually given by mouth and the dose is gradually increased to the limit of tolerance. No fixed amount can be predetermined because no two patients will react exactly alike.

As soon as improvement appears the dose is lowered until the symptoms become pronounced. It is finally fixed at a point which will give the maximum control and at the same time not produce unbearable dryness of the mouth. Many patients are enabled thereby to take atropine indefinitely.

We must recall that this drug dilates the pupils of the eyes, causing blurring of vision. If it is taken over a period of months these symptoms as a rule are far less noticeable. Under the influence of atropine the gait becomes more normal, muscular rigidity begins to disappear, and sometimes patients who have been bedfast have been so far restored as to be able to feed and dress themselves.

Most authors agree that the atropine treatment is well worth a trial provided the patient can be under accurate medical supervision so that overdosing will not occur.

Polka Dots in New Role

Polka dots play a prominent role in this season's fashion scene when they're used as ingenuously as on this frock. The dress itself, on classically simple shirtwaist lines, has green dots sprinkled over a white background. The jacket, with its pert peplum and full sleeves falling in graceful folds, has white dots on green ground. The effect is all that could be desired for a smart summer evening gown. If you wish to know where this costume may be purchased, call Frances Mangum, The Post Fashion Editor, National 4200, Extension 323.

Amy Lowell's Aid Says Poet Misunderstood

Mrs. Ada Dwyer Russell, Here on Visit, Talks of Association.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

LITERARY women are rarely understood, either by their contemporaries or those who come after them.

Take Amy Lowell, for example. Mention of her name today conjures up countless ideas about this enigmatic woman who smoked big black cigars and helped to make her country poetry-conscious.

Yet, of all persons who have discussed the famous poet from platform and in print, probably no one is prepared to give a more authentic word-picture of her than her literary executrix, Ada Dwyer Russell, who was a member of Miss Lowell's household from 1912 until the poet died in 1925.

Mrs. Russell came to Washington to visit her daughter, Mrs. Theodore Amussen, 4400 P street, and to attend the celebrity breakfast of the League of American Pen Women as one of the honor guests. Yesterday, she told something of Miss Lowell and her career, and explained why so many legends have grown up around her name.

She described the poet as "the most dynamic woman I ever knew," and mentioned that Miss Lowell frequently spoke of herself as being "like John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness—but for poetry."

She pointed out Amy Lowell frequently was misunderstood by her friends and other contemporaries because she gave so much time to her work, she had little left for people. "Literature was her only interest. She worked on the average of 18 hours a day, and when she was getting out a book, she concentrated on her writing to the exclusion of everything else."

Much of the poet's work was done in the early morning hours, according to Mrs. Russell. "She turned night into day," she went on. "She gave orders never to be disturbed until she rang a bell in the morning. Frequently, we did not hear it until as late as 4 o'clock in the afternoon."

She also mentioned that Miss Lowell, in her later years, was never in good health; that she had four unsuccessful operations; that "her general condition, coupled with her continual desire to work, nullified the effects of every measure taken to restore her health," and that her monumental two-volume work, "John Keats," finally was what exhausted her completely.

Mrs. Russell characterized her more than a dozen years of close association with Miss Lowell as "a great privilege." Being with such an inspiring individual is a rare experience, for which anyone should be grateful, she believes. "She was like a new current turned on," Mrs. Russell continued. "I shall never forget her warm personality, her keen sense of humor, her passion for poetry and for work, which proved early in her career she was the genius the literary world now recognizes her to be. If she was something of a puzzle to her contemporaries, it was because literature seemed to fill her life so completely."

The long black cigars that created so much comment during Amy Lowell's lifetime "were very mild, almost as mild as cigarettes, and were especially made for her," according to Mrs. Russell. "Her physician advised her not to smoke cigarettes. It is surprising, however, that with so much to be recalled about the poet, there are so many queries about her cigars."

MARY HAWORTH Says:

When Affianced Couple Disagree on Religion, They Should Think Twice Before Marrying.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am faced with the biggest problem of my life. Perhaps you can help me. I am almost 23, an only child, and live with my widowed mother. We both work. Several years ago I became very friendly with a girl about three years my senior. She was married and used to invite me to go places with herself and her husband. We had grand times together. The girl and I worked at the same place and used to lunch together. She would tell me the nice things her husband had said about me, and I, of course, was flattered. One day she told me her husband was in love with me. He had told her he was. I was surprised. I knew he liked me, but didn't think it serious. My feeling for him was that of friendship. The girl didn't seem to be a bit jealous; in fact, rather encouraged us. They had been married about seven years.

Mary Haworth

* * * *

Her husband and I began having dates together and he confessed his love for me. The more I saw of him, the more I liked him. It wasn't long before I was admitting my love, too. Mother knew I'd been going out with them, but didn't know I was seeing him alone. I intended to tell her about the situation, but before I did the girl's grandmother called her and told her of the affair. Mother was shocked and hurt. She told me I would have to stop seeing him or leave home. I didn't want to make a hasty decision so I stopped seeing him for a while. His wife got a divorce and he started giving her a small sum of money every month of his own free will and because she was in need of it.

* * * *

We started going together again without my mother's knowledge. Several months later I decided to stop seeing him forever. I felt so discouraged and blue because of my mother's opposition and I felt it was too soon after his divorce for us to marry. We broke up and for two months I didn't see him at all. During that time I felt nothing mattered. I couldn't get interested in anything. Finally, when I couldn't stand it any longer I telephoned him. He seemed very glad to hear from me and again we started going together. Not long afterward we became secretly engaged. We felt more secure then and it was fun planning for the future. We have been engaged for ten months and are planning to be married this year.

* * * *

I still haven't told my mother about things. I want to prove to her it isn't a silly infatuation, as she supposed, but that I really love him. Ever since we've been engaged my fiance has wanted me to tell mother, but if I had told her she would have insisted upon my not seeing him. That, of course, would have been impossible under the circumstances. I don't want to tell her until a month or so before we are to be married. I don't want to run away and get married without telling her, because that would hurt her more. It hasn't been easy—living two lives and trying to keep things going right. Of course, I've had to lie to mother about almost everything and that hurts.

* * * *

My fiance often becomes downhearted because he can't come to see me in my own home and I feel the same way. He is living at his mother's again and I'm not welcome there, either. Both of us have lots of friends and we visit quite a bit. A few of our best friends know of our secret engagement.

* * * *

Despite the fact that we've been planning to be married in the near future there is one very important angle which we seem to have overlooked until now. That is religion. I am Protestant. He was Catholic before his marriage. He wasn't married in the church, so, of course, his first marriage wasn't considered binding from the Catholic point of view. He isn't considered Catholic now. I was so sure he wouldn't object to being married as a Protestant that I didn't give it much thought. About a week ago he told me he would like to be married by a priest. If we were married by a priest it would mean rearing our children Catholic; that is, if we have any. Much as I love him, that would be hard to do. He feels that if he confesses everything to a priest and is married Catholic he can be much happier. He is rather disillusioned about his first marriage and wants ours to be more binding. I'm trying to be broad-minded about this, but I feel he isn't looking far enough into the future to see what it would mean to me.

* * * *

I wouldn't turn Catholic myself and I don't want my children to, because I'm not in sympathy with that faith. My fiance says if he were married Catholic he would go back into the church. If getting married by a priest was all there was to it, I wouldn't mind. It's just that I'm thinking of our future happiness. It is usually up to the mother to look after a child's religious training. I love my fiance and want a home of my own very much, but everything seems to be against us. Should I let these difficulties stand in my way? What would you advise me to do? Very gratefully yours, WORRIED.

* * * *

DEAR WORRIED: When a person holds positive religious convictions, I should never advise his playing them false in the hope of attaining happiness. Neither would I advise him to try to persuade another to go against his conscience in the matter of religious faith. If your fiance has discovered after experimentation that happiness and stability in marriage for him is to be found the Catholic way—in confessing his sins, being married in his church and subscribing faithfully to its doctrines in future, you would very probably be building on sand in insisting on his making a marriage outside his church. If he can't see your way and you can't see his way, the only thing to do, for your respective sakes and the sake of any children either of you may one day have, is to give each other up and go your separate ways, looking elsewhere for more suitable life companions. SUBSTITUTE SWEETHEART

By Priscilla Wayne

Ruth Dayton, 18, beautiful, has been hired to impersonate June Bradley, whom she greatly resembles. The impersonation—she had been told by Joe and Clara Bradley—is an innocent attempt to ease the dying hours of their nephew, Jim Bradley, June's stepbrother, who has been blinded in a motor accident. They had explained June could not go to Jim because of illness.

However, Ruth finds herself falling in love with the man she had been hired to deceive—who seems likely to get well. The prospect of Jim's recovery appears not to please his relatives. They fire his nurses and hire a man. A new doctor takes over the case. Jim grows worse, and they exult.

Ruth is a virtual prisoner. She cannot get help—she cannot confide in Jim, who is too ill. The Bradleys, hoping to lull her suspicions, suggest a shopping trip. Ruth writes a letter to her brother, Jerry, explaining her predicament. She hopes to mail it downtown.

Chapter XI.

Ruth almost forgot the letter.

This was the type of shopping she had always longed to do—in exclusive shops with lovely girls modeling each garment.

Mrs. Bradley urged her on to more buying. "Two or three handsome negligees, June. You'll need them."

"It won't be so long now."

"You can't tell. Better buy another."

Ruth decided on another. Mrs. Bradley evidently thought she had surmounted all suspicions. "Now how about an evening gown?"

"You bought one for me. I won't need another."

"Better," Mrs. Bradley urged. "If Jim is really getting better, he'll be wanting to sit up soon. There'll be people in. One evening gown couldn't possibly do."

At the hat shop Ruth had a sudden inspiration. She remembered the letter. The salon was lovely, exclusive.

Through the beautifully draped full-length windows, opening on the lobby, Ruth could see a mail box, one of the kind that is just under a glass letter drop that serves several floors. It was just a step from the door of the salon to that mail box.

Now Was Time.

Mr. Bradley was deep in a paper he had purchased just a few minutes before, settled down in the depths of an easy chair, smoking his cigaret and reading nonchalantly.

Mrs. Bradley was trying on hats. It seemed the logical time. Ruth opened her bag, made pretense of renewing her make-up, slipped the letter out, hid it behind the bag. Closed the bag slowly, watching furtively.

Now seemed the appointed time. Ruth rose quickly, turned in a flash to the door.

She was quick—but not too quick for Joseph Bradley. Quicker than a wink he was on his feet, had crossed the floor and caught the girl's wrist.

"What is it, Mr. Bradley?" the obsequious manager asked, hurrying forward.

Mr. Bradley was charmingly frank in his explanation.

"Just nothing, Mr. Sawyer. Miss June is—well, you know——"

"A bit willful?" The very, very courteous manager smiled. "I know. Most young people are."

"I wanted to mail a letter," Ruth said resentfully.

"You see? She wanted to mail a letter." Mr. Bradley smiled, spread his hands in a deprecating, apologetic fashion.

Tell Tom.

"Young folks will be young folks," the proprietor said suavely.

"Miss June will correspond—or try to," Joseph Bradley smiled mockingly at his niece, "with people beneath her. This young man is a fortune hunter. Mr. Bradley doesn't want his sister having anything to do with him."

Mr. Bradley summoned the car. They sat together, waiting for it. Mr. Bradley spoke softly, seemingly without concern.

"Please, June," Bradley's voice was almost patient. "Please don't make a break like that again. It may get you into trouble."

"Into trouble?"

"Well, another proprietor might not know us. He might be tempted to believe what you had to say. I might have to do something more drastic."

"Suppose I tell the chauffeur?"

Mr. Bradley laughed aloud, quietly but gleefully, at the very thought. "Why don't you try it? Tom knows the real June, you know. He knows that she's willful, erratic, imaginative, maybe not too truthful. Anyone who ever knew her knows that much. Why don't you try telling Tom?

Ruth did not try telling Tom. She sat back quietly in the car, saying not a word all the way home. She was remembering the other things Josephy Bradley had been saying to her just as the Bradley car swung up to the curbing.

He had been saying quite jovially, "Make a fuss if you want to, my dear, even call this intercepting of your letter a criminal act. The letter is to your brother, isn't it?"

"Yes?"

"Well, do you want him barging down on us here, thinking we're all kinds of crooks? That certainly would upset the applecart. He'd take you away. You'd never see Jim again. You do want to stay with Jim?"

"Yes, oh yes."

"Well, you see? Take my advice and behave yourself. You'll be glad, when Jim gets better, that you didn't send the letter. And you'll know we aren't crooks—just having to be a little bit stern, that's all, because you're so flighty."

Jim was sleeping when they returned home. "He had a good lunch. He's much better," Pascoe told them. "Bette is with him right now. I'm going to roll in for a little sleep, myself. You can see him in an hour or so, when he wakes up."

"Good old Pascoe," Mrs. Bradley said, "he pulled Uncle Joe through a serious spell of typhoid fever. It was certainly lucky we could get him to come on the case. Uncle Joe thought at first he couldn't."

"There are plenty of nurses in Chicago," Ruth demurred, "I liked the ones who were here when we came."

"Good enough, I guess," Mrs. Bradley agreed. "But not like Pascoe. We've known Pascoe for so long a time. We feel so at ease with him here. There's just one thing wrong with Pascoe——"

Ruth remembered that scene in the corridor. "He'd like to take me to a picture show?"

"Yes, he's very apt to be flirtatious. But if you know that, then you just let him alone. And that's all. He can't resist a pretty face. I had to speak sharply to him the other night. He was forgetting his place."

Ruth studied Mrs. Bradley carefully. Certainly she seemed sincere. But why not be perfectly frank? "Does he know who I am, Mrs. Bradley?"

"Why certainly. You're Miss June Bradley, the sister of his patient."

"But he took care of Mr. Bradley through the typhoid fever?"

"Yes, he did."

Fun to Dress.

"Well, then, surely he knew the real June?"

"He doesn't suspect. I tell you, my child, the likeness is so great it's uncanny. Pascoe doesn't dream of anything queer."

"He doesn't? Then why did he call me Ruth?"

For an instant that question dismayed Mrs. Bradley—but for only an instant. "Easy enough to answer, my dear."

"Easy? Then answer it."

"He didn't imagine it. It happened."

"You think it happened. You've suspected everybody, including yourself. Now you're suspecting poor Pascoe. Snap out of it, my dear. Pascoe is o. k. He's a wonderful nurse.

It was fun to dress up in the new things. Fun to hang them in the closet, to try them on one by one.

There was one lovely afternoon gown—a shimmering blue gown cut modestly in the front with huge puff sleeves that accentuated Ruth's girlish figure. At the neckline was a huge red artificial poppy. Ruth had never before owned a gown so simple—or so attractive.

She brushed her soft, red gold hair. Arranged it in careless ringlets. She dusted her arms and shoulders with toilet powder and sprayed a bit of perfume upon her shoulders.

"June—no, Ruth Bradley."

Mrs. Clara Bradley came to the door. "Jim's awake. He's eager to see you."

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

SHE DIDN'T have much money to spend when they first got married so she had to cut the corners everywhere she could. One place she economized, though, that she wished afterwards she hadn't . . . that was on the mattresses. She bought very cheap ones and rued the day. Because they not only slept on lumps for several years—but in the end, she's having to replace the mattresses.

There's no luxury in the world like a good bed—especially after a session with a mountainous hard one. We're a great ballyhooer of inner-spring mattresses, though we started out to sniff at them suspiciously. But when we went to get a new mattress, we fell for the sales talk on the inner-springs, just the same as this lady in the sketch. And have never been sorry . . .

But there are variations of inner-spring mattresses. Some have hardly enough coils to be worthy of the name. The most reliable ones have plenty of coils carefully pocketed and packed in place, then layer felt filling besides. If you have a good inner spring mattress, you can get along with an ordinary coil spring, although of course a good box spring is grand to have and an excellent investment, too.

Mrs. Heinrick, Hurt in Traffic, Dies at Home

Coroner Orders Autopsy; Driver Held in Death of Leonard Murphy.

Mrs. Caroline Heinrick, 61, of 1114 E street southeast, who was struck April 1 by an automobile while crossing Pennsylvania avenue between Eleventh and Twelfth streets southeast, died yesterday at her home. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald ordered an autopsy performed to determine whether the woman's death was due to the accident.

Meanwhile, police were notified yesterday of the death in Walter Reed Hospital Sunday of Leonard Murphy, colored, 39, of 1924 Seventeenth street northwest, who died as a result of injuries received when struck by an automobile April 4.

His death brought Washington's traffic total to 28 for this year. Dr. MacDonald said result of the autopsy in Mrs. Heinrick's death would be revealed today.

Mrs. Heinrick was found unconscious in her home by her daughter, Mrs. Anna Cardon. She was pronounced dead by a doctor from Casualty Hospital. She had been treated for a skull fracture at the time of the accident.

Harry G. Berkeley, of 18 Eighteenth street southeast, driver of the car, will appear at a coroner's inquest.

Murphy was struck while crossing Georgia avenue northwest in the 2600 block by a car operated by Eugene Roberson, colored, 29, of 1135 Columbia road northwest. He was taken to Freedmen's Hospital and later transferred to Walter Reed. He died of pulmonary hemorrhage after a leg was amputated.

Roberson was arrested by Tenth Precinct police and released in custody of his attorney for the coroner's inquest.

Wilbur Stultz, colored, 10, of 621 Rhode Island avenue northwest, suffered leg injuries yesterday when knocked down by an automobile while playing in front of his home.

The child was treated at Freedmen's Hospital. Elam B. Jones, 69, of Springfield, Mass., driver of the car which struck Wilbur, was not held by police.

Harry Seinor, of 4012 South Eighteenth street, Arlington, Va., suffered skull injuries and fractures of both legs when he was struck last night on the Columbia pike in Arlington by a car operated by Palma Shaper, Negro, of 1719 I street northwest. He was taken to Emergency Hospital.

Peace Essay Winner Admits He Plagiarized, Loses Award

Youth, 18, Forfeits $5,000 Prize 'for College Education;' 'I Don't See Anything Wrong,' He Says, Admitting He Copied Article.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 13.—Eighteen-year-old Lloyd Lewis, of Plattsburg, Mo., sat in a Manhattan skyscraper office tonight and saw his dream of a college education swept away because he didn't undertsand the meaning of plagiarism.

Lloyd, announced as the winner of a $5,000 prize esay contest sponsored by Eddie Cantor, the comedian, seemed nothing but bewildered as Cantor's agent told him that he was disqualified from the prize because he had plagiarized, word for word, part of an article written several months ago by Dr. Frank Kingdon, president of Newark University, for a magazine.

Cantor's contest was for a peace essay, and Dr. Kingdon's article had been on the same subject.

Wide-eyed, the farm youth turned to questioners.

"What is plagiarism?" he asked. "I don't know what it means."

Informed, he readily admitted copying Dr. Kingdon's article and submitting it as his own in the contest which he entered as a junior in the Plattsburg High School.

"Sure, I copied the article," he told his astounded audience. "I don't see anything wrong in that. It was much better than I could have done and honestly I don't see anything wrong in it. I wanted to win the contest and go to college, so I just looked up a lot of magazine articles on the same subject in the library and then picked out what I thought was the best. I didn't copy it all, though. I just took enough paragraphs to make it the right length. I counted the words."

Cantor's agent, Ben F. Holzman, said that Lloyd would be sent back to Plattsburg by plane tonight with his transportation paid.

From a list of 13 other finalists in the contest, for which over 200,000 entries were received, the judges will select another winner, Holtzman said, and the prize will be turned over to him or her.

Science Shows Gains in War On Pneumonia

New Type of Tuberculin Also Is Reported by Mellon Institute.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, April 13.—The Mellon Institute of Industrial Research reported today advances in the fight against pneumonia and development of a new type of tuberculin that may aid in diagnosis of tuberculosis.

Dr. E. R. Weidlein, the institute's director, listed "hydroxyethylapocupreine" as the "most important drug that has been found up to the present" in combating pneumonia.

He added investigation in this field, carried on by the department of pure chemistry, showed the drug has "high anti-pneumococcic activity."

The report continued that the drug "has also been tested in 26 clinical cases which have demonstrated a very high tolerance in the human to the drug, absence of any visual effects, and a high proportion of recoveries from severe pneumococcic infections of all types."

The institute's annual report also said research into the treatment of pneumonia and allied pulmonary diseases has resulted in the production of an apparently effectual pneumococcic serum."

Dr. Weidlein's report added that investigators also have carried on artificial breeding experiments with tuberculosis bacillus and discovered a new form of the germ shedding new light on the disease.

The report said: "This new bacillus is capable of producing a tuberculin that is different from the tuberculin derivable from the human, bovine or avian bacillus.

"The breeding of this organism may therefore aid in the diagnosis of tuberculosis."

Apple Blossom Festival Marks Flag Dedication

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., April 13.—The new flag of the City of Winchester will be dedicated on the first day of the Apple Blossom Festival, it was announced today.

Dr. S. L. Flickinger is assisting in preparing the ceremony to be used, in which Queen Shenandoah, escorted by her court and a military unit and band, will participate.

Supreme Court Will Consider Wampler Case

Highest Tribunal Agrees to Rule on Release of D. C. Man.

By the Associated Press.

The Supreme Court agreed yesterday to consider three questions from judges of the Third Circuit Court of Appeals which resulted from release of Thomas Morris Wampler, of Washington, D. C., from the Federal penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa., under a writ of habeas corpus.

Wampler was convicted by a Federal court in Maryland for violation of income tax laws. He was sentenced late in 1933 to 18 months and $5,000 fines on two counts, to run concurrently.

When the court clerk made out his prison commitment he wrote that Wampler should be held until court costs and fines were paid. After serving the 18 months, he protested in court that the judge had not ordered him held until fines and court costs were paid.

It ruled against him a year ago and Wampler did not appeal.

His attorneys won his release in a Federal court at Scranton, Pa., under the habeas corpus action. From this Warden Henry C. Hill of Lewisburg, Pa., appealed to the Third Circuit Court.

The Supreme Court today agreed to pay costs in the questions the circuit court wishes answered.

These are:

1. Was the provision for payment of fines and court costs, inserted by the court clerk, "void or merely irregular?"

2. Was the ruling of the sentencing Maryland judge final until reversed by direct appeal?

3. Can one court grant a writ of habeas corpus to "correct a commitment" by another court on the ground the sentence was inserted by the court clerk and not orally pronounced by the judge?

In the Maryland court appeal from the clerk's action, it was argued that the insertion was customary by court clerks under Maryland practice.

Curran, Champion Of Miners, Stricken

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., April 13 (AP).—White-haired Mgr. J. J. Curran, champion of union miners in many a labor controversy, collapsed today while Government agents sought a madman suspect in the "Easter present" bombings, which claimed two lives and injured three others.

Father Curran was stricken by a heart attack in St. Mary's rectory, which took fire while the bombing terror was at its height Good Friday. Friends said excitement and worry about the deadly plot caused the aged priest's illness.

Bombers were suspected of setting the rectory afire, but the priest maintained he was not a victim of the plot; that the rectory fire could not be linked with the bombings.

Investigators turned from Wilkes-Barre to nearby Hanover township, meanwhile, in the hope of turning up a tangible clew. They refused to discuss the progress of their investigation, other than to intimate the countryside near Buttonwood Colliery might produce a suspect.

Woodrum to Speak.

Representative Clifton A. Woodrum, Roanoke, yesterday accepted an invitation to deliver the Jefferson Day dinner address today at Altoona, Pa., according to the Associated Press.

Blanton Delays Rent Bill

very important function to perform for the people of the District and is entitled to a fair hearing. Whether you approve of this bill or not, it is entitled to be considered on its merits.

"I can't control the members of the House, but I urge you to stay on the floor to constitute a quorum. You'll save no time by going back to your offices, because another quorum call will bring you right back."

Throughout the afternoon members grumbled loudly against the repeated roll calls and several members voiced their condemnation of the filibuster on the floor.

Mrs. Norton Reads Threats.

Blanton has written several threatening letters to District Committee members who have come to cross-purposes with him, but Mrs. Norton is the first in recent years to read the threats on the floor.

The Texan, basing his letter upon an address made by the district committee chairman at a Washington gathering, threatened to go into Mrs. Norton's district in New Jersey to fight her at the next primary election.

Smiling, Mrs. Norton retorted:

"So far as my district is concerned—don't worry about it. Come to it at any time and I shall be there to welcome you. So will my constituents. They would like to get a look at the man who several times defeated my bill to pay $90,000 owed by the Government to Jersey City for water supplied during the war."

Blanton complained that Mrs. Norton had told a Washington audience that she had sought unsuccessfully to discover his "soft spot."

"The only soft spot about me that you could ever work on is the gentlemanly instinct that has been born and bred into my very bone and fibre for generations to be courteous always to a lady," he added.

Vicious Attacks Charged.

Complaining that Mrs. Norton had made "vicious attacks' 'on him on the floor and in the press, Blanton declared:

"I have reached the point now, with your continued spiteful and unjustified attacks, where forebearance ceases to be a virtue. Simply because you happen to be a woman gives you no right whatever to attack a man. You have only the same rights that all of your other colleagues enjoy. And I want you to distinctly understand, clearly and unmistakably, that from now on I intend to answer in kind every attack you make on me. You just 'can't take it.'"

After re-iterating many of his arguments regarding District taxes, the gentleman from Texas said:

"Since you have seen fit to attack me at a public function simply because I faithfully performed my duty under oath and was trying to protect your constituents as well as my own from injustice, I am willing to meet you on this issue in your district before your people in your primary campaign and see whether your Democrats will back you in your efforts to unduly tax them. I am going to take it upon myself to let your Democrats know the facts about this issue."

To this Mrs. Norton replied as follows, in part:

"My dear Mr. Blanton:

"I have your letter of March 20 and admit that upon first reading it achieved its purpose. I was angry beyond words. But upon second reading it produced only amusement that you could be irritated to such a point that you would address such a letter to a colleague; more especially since that cause of your temper is merely a reference to the possibility of your having a 'soft spot,' a sympathetic tenderness, if you please, for someone or some place. You vigorously deny having any such. I frankly admit having many—for crippled children, for tuberculosis victims, for overcrowded hospital wards, for overworked nurses, for juvenile offenders, for first offenders thrown into crowded jails indiscriminately with hardened criminals, and so on down a long list. Nor am I ashamed of them.

"Some things I must suggest in reply. You refer to the $5,700,000 Federal allowance to the District of Columbia as being my fight, my effort, my budget, my burden on the taxpayers. It was not. That figure was the President's figure. He sent the budget of $5,700,000 to Congress. It was his judgment, his wish, his effort. My feeble attempt was merely to support the President's budget. You were tearing it down. And you not only tore it down but now you say that anyone who agrees with the President's budget is making a baseless, unjustified attack on you.

"As to the imposition of taxes on our respective constituents, let me remind you that in reducing the District of Columbia budget by $3,000,000 you saved your constituents and mine about 2 cents apiece. That is all that is involved so far as they are concerned. You have voted for many bills that cost your constituents much more money than that, bills that appropriated many millions and even billions. I don't believe that you are wise to raise too great an issue about the tax bills you have opposed as against those you have supported.

Selection of Items Amazing.

"And while we are talking about the District of Columbia budget let me say that the most amazing thing to me, at least about your treatment of that bill, was your selection of items to cut. You increased the appropriation for the Zoo and decreased the amounts for tuberculosis dispensaries and for hygiene and sanitation in the public schools. You increased the allowance for the National Training Schools, Federal reform institutions for juveniles from all over the United States, and decreased the allowance for Emergency Hospital. You increased the Soldiers and Sailors Home and decreased the Children's Tuberculosis Sanitarium. You increased the expense allowance for the improvement and care of parks and decreased the salaries for the police. You increased the allownaces for the militia and for the collection of refuse, but decreased those for prevention of contagious diseases, for bacteriological laboratories and for child hygiene service.

"As to constructive measures which I have introduced or reported I would be glad to match my list with yours. I do not seem to recall many constructive 'Blanton acts, although you have been in Congress much longer than I have. As a starter I mention, on my account, the old-age pension, the blind pension; the prole (parole) law, the firearms act, the alley-dwelling clearance, the liquor-control act, the education of veterans' orphans, the loan to the Children's Hospital, auto responsibility act, the equal distribution of property to women, smoke control, the removal of dangerous buildings and insanitary buildings. What are some of yours, Mr. Blanton?

How Do Records Compare?

"Then, as to my success in piloting my bills through the House, I admit a great debt of gratitude to my colleagues, but a hurried examination of the records indicates that of a total of 153 bills reported by me as chairman of the District of Columbia Committee in the Seventy-second, Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses, only three were defeated by a vote of the House. I think that is a pretty fair record. How does it compare with yours?

"You mentioned a lot of things you can think of. Well, the only thing I can think of about you is that you have caused a lot of embarrassment to your constituents as well as to the membership of the House. You have cost thousands of dollars to the taxpayers of the country for hundreds of pages in the Congressional Record without a single constructive achievement. I can think of many Representatives from your State who are a credit to the State, but I can think of you only with sorrow that you should use the many gifts God has given you to crush the less fortunate—to ridicule those in power.

"As to your 'courteous and decent' treatment of me—I prefer to let my colleagues in Congress appraise your treatment of me during the past five years."

Blanton Given More Time.

Although Blanton had on the previous District Day exhausted his time for debate, Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, allowed him 20 minutes more and then gave Mrs. Norton five minutes after she had exhausted her time.

Blanton repeated that he is a gentleman and that he was able to wage many fights that might endanger the re-election of other members not so secure in their own districts.

It is for this reason, he said, that "two-bit reporters" daily hit him below the belt in newspaper stories.

Representative Scott (Democrat), of California, arose to object to the inference that other members refused to oppose unsound legislation for fear of losing votes.

The closing blast in behalf of the rent bill was fired by stocky Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma.

"This is one bill that, if it becomes a law, will directly affect every one of you," he said.

Can Vote Against Bill.

"If any member feels he is not paying enough rent in comparison with what he pays back home or as to value received, or if any member has any constituents working here for the Government who are not paying enough rent, let him vote against this bill.

"I don't know whether this bill is constitutional or not, but my guess is as good as that of any other lawyer in the House. And the purpose is certainly commendable."

As it was 5 o'clock when the debate time was concluded, Mrs. Norton was compelled to allow the reading of the lengthy bill to go over until another District day, thereby endangering other District legislation and probably the Sisson bill to repeal the Blanton anti-red rider.

Traffic Bills Go to Budget BureauToday

Experts Finish Drafting 4 Measures Sought by Commissioners.

Limit Cabs, Order Snow Removal and Provide Parking Control.

Four measures which the Commissioners say will round out their authority to control and improve traffic conditions in the National Capital are to go to the Federal Bureau of the Budget for approval today, prior to submission tomorrow to the Senate District Appropriations sub-committee headed by Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma.

Drafting of the measures was completed yesterday by Vernon E. West, acting corporation counsel, and Richmond B. Keech, vice chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, and approved by the Commissioners.

The measures authorize limiting the number of taxicabs to 2,000, authorize the Commissioners to draft regulations to compel property owners to remove snow from in front of their property, provide for licensing and general control over parking lots and authorize the Commissioners to install mechanical parking devices, such as the patented "parkometer" on the city streets.

Appointment by the Speaker and the Vice President of a special Congressional committee to study and report to the President on the question of extending the staggered hours of employment plan is provided for in the fourth measure. The committee would be composed of two Senators and two Representatives. Staggering opening and closing hours of official agencies has been urged as a means of reducing congestion peaks in traffic. Among other changes considered is one to open schools at 9:30 a. m. instead of 9 a. m.

Four other measures pending in Congress should be enacted, it was agreed. These provide for semi-annual inspection of motor vehicles, a system of magistrates courts to handle minor traffic violations, increased penalties for reckless driving, and stopping of violators of local regulations from driving in the District on permits issued by other jurisdictions.

Ample authority already is reposed in the Commissioners to deal with the most contentious of all traffic betterment proposals, that of parking on the city streets, West said. Legislation which would ban parking in the downtown area was suggested by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen at hearings held recently by the Carpenter House District sub-committee.

Elimination of parking of any kind on the "flow" sides of arterial highways during the morning and afternoon rush hours has been urged by the Public Utilities Commission as of major importance in any effort to speed up mass transportation. This has been urged by the Federation of Citizens Associations, but it also has been opposed by the Merchants and Manufacturers Association. The Commissioners have given no indication they intend to take any drastic steps relative to parking in the near future.

Student Here Hails Gen, Calles' Exile

He declared the Calles government was responsible for the assassination in 1927 of his father, Gen. Arnulfo Gomez, while he was campaigning for the presidency of the neighboring republic.

Young Gomez praised President Cardenas, believed to have figured in the exile to this country of Calles.

"I was down at our ranch last summer," he added. "It's wonderful what Cardenas is doing for the country. He is a real man."

Carl Donch to Speak.

Carl Donch will talk on "Banks and Depositors" at 1 p. m. today before the Columbia Heights Business Men's Association in Sholl's restaurant, 3027 Fourteenth street northwest. Community advertising will be considered at another meeting of the association at 8:30 o'clock tonight in the Tompkins Building.

Found Room-Hunters Look For Vacancies In The Morning!

After advertising in all Washington papers to rent vacant rooms, Mrs. W. G. Scherer, of 2405 North Capitol street, said she has discovered that room-hunters consult the morning papers for vacancies, and so she uses Post Want Ads. The other day she had a vacancy and inserted this inexpensive ad in The Post:

N. CAPITOL, 2405—Clean, single room, 2d floor; private family; new-house condition; gentleman; $3.50 week.

The second morning it appeared, she rented the room to a Post reader. The longer your room is vacant, the more money you're losing. Let a Post Want Ad find a tenant for you. Call

"Debris," Flotsam of the Airways

"Debris," the dog, arrived at Washington Airport yesterday from Pittsburgh. She had stowed away on a plane at Baltimore, when floods had closed the fields here. Discovered at Pittsburgh, her picture was published and recognized by her owner, to whom she is being returned. Pilot George McKee flew her back.

U. S. Marshal Proves a Friend To Families Facing Eviction

Colpoys and Deputies Endeavor to Avoid Execution of Landlord's Orders; His Intervention Aids Many to Remain in Homes.

The United States marshal's office in the District is in reality a clearing house for welfare agencies.

Although charged with the job of evicting families unable to pay their rent, the deputies and the marshal himself scurry around working overtime to try to find ways of keeping people in their homes.

The number of orders for evictions has more than doubled since April 1, when 4,100 families were removed from the direct relief rolls because one or more in a family is physically able to work, although perhaps unable to find a job. But only about 25 per cent of the evictions are ever executed. The other 75 per cent are saved by Marshal John B. Colpoys or his chief deputy, Thomas E. Ott. The marshal's rulings save many families.

No one is ever evicted on a Saturday.

No one is moved onto the street a minute later in the day than the noon whistle.

If the weather man says it is going to rain, or even shower or become misty and raw, all eviction orders for the day are cancelled.

Order Delayed.

If it looks as though a landlord might allow a family to stay for another week another day—even—the order is delayed.

And in addition the whole marshal's office tries to find help for the families who must have their beds, tables and chairs set out on the pavement if none is forthcoming.

So, due to the efforts of the marshal's office, the actual number of evictions has not increased over the normal two or three a day. But let Ott tell his own story.

"Nobody likes to set a family of a man, wife and a couple of kids out on the street," he said, "so we do everything possible to avoid that.

"When an eviction notice finally comes to us for action after the court has heard the case, we try to find some social service agency that will care for the family in distress.

"We call them all just in case some one of them can give aid. Then, if they do nothing, we try to get in touch with the landlord to see if he can possibly extend the time to give someone in the family a chance to get a job. We have found the real estate people very generous. They don't like to put people out either, although there are some families we know about who will never pay rent, have no intentions of doing so, and would rather be on the move continually than make the attempt. You can't do much for people like that, but there aren't so many of them."

"Courtesy Notice."

Ott explained the workings of the law when all else fails. He said that when eviction is necessary, a "courtesy notice" to move within 48 hours is sent to the family. At the end of that time, the landlord can tell the marshal's office to go ahead with the eviction. If that is not done within ten days, the eviction order automatically is cancelled and another writ, lasting another ten days, must be secured by the landlord.

"I don't know how we will handle the situation in another month, for it will take that long until we get the full reaction of the end of public relief for employable people. That's because of the leniency of the majority of landlords who will give their tenants that long to find ways of paying the rent."

As far as the relief rolls go, it was announced some time ago that relief would continue on its present basis of no aid for employable people until at least the end of the fiscal year on July 1. Then, unless some further provision is made in the way of additional relief appropriations, it will continue for another fiscal year.

Thomas Hides Identity, Pays Gallinger Visit

Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, took the alias of John Q. Public on Easter Sunday to inspect Gallinger Hospital and discover that mice play football in some of its wards.

Traveling strictly incognito, the chairman of the Senate sub-committee on District Appropriations set out to see for himself just what there is to charges that the hospital is deplorably handicapped by lack of funds.

Several Senators have made inspection tours through Gallinger and Tuberculosis Hospitals in recent weeks in connection with Congressional hearings on the District's 1937 supply bill, but Thomas was the first to shield his identity.

Describing his observations to reporters yesterday, the white-haired Oklahoman gleefully told how successfully he made the rounds without his name or position being learned.

"When I asked one interne a question, he gave a short answer and then walked away," Thomas laughed.

Not so funny, he continued, were the things he learned and saw. One ward patient, a woman, told him that since she has been there 26 persons have died in the ward with nothing to shut them off from view but a flimsy screen. Such a situation aggravates the condition of other patients, the woman told Senator Thomas.

He learned, too, that mice are numerous in some of the rooms.

"I was told they organize their own football games," Thomas said.

Several nurses admitted, upon questioning, that their hours are long and they don't have enough assistance. Thomas said he was surprised to find about one-fifth of the hospital's beds vacant after listening to witnesses testify to overcrowding.

The Senator also visited the District Home for Aged and Infirm at Blue Plains. He said he found the residents comfortable, but described the buildings as firetraps.

Overcrowding Explained.

Speaking last night at the Stanton Park Citizens Association meeting, Dr. Philip A. E. Stebbing, of the staff of Gallinger Hospital, explained by the municipal hospital could have vacant beds and still be overcrowded.

Dr. Stebbing pointed out that while 50 per cent of the beds in the children's ward might at one time be vacant, the surplus patients in an adult ward could not be accommodated in the temporary vacancy.

Senator Elmer Thomas, (Democrat), of Oklahoma, and chairman of the Senate Appropriations subcommittee, after making an unannounced inspection of Gallinger last Sunday, said he found a 20 per cent vacancy in the patient accommodations at that hospital.

Enlarging on his explanation, Dr. Stebbing further stated that though there might be a sizable number of unoccupied beds in the women's psychopathic ward, women patients from the medical ward could not be transferred there.

Dr. Stebbing also declared the overcrowded condition is more prevalent during the winter months and that by next January every available bed will be in use. He further stated that the hospital was receiving 50 to 60 patients more a month in the last 12 months than in the year before.

Other speakers were Dr. Joseph H. Murphy, of the Public Health Department, who stressed the individual's responsibility in health control, and Dr. Charles B. Campbell, who spoke on the history of medicine.

ChurchHeads Plead Cause Of Tolerance

Protestant, Catholic and Jewish Clergy Convene Here.

European Situation Is Cited as Example of Bad Course.

Religious tolerance was urged last night at a dinner of the National Conference of Jews and Christians at the Hamilton Hotel.

Honor guests included Dr. Everett R. Clinchy, conference director; the Rev. Michael J. Ahern, S. J., of Weston, Mass., and Rabbi Morris S. Lazaron, Baltimore, three conference representatives touring the country to cement interdenominational good will.

The importance of the "pilgrimage of neighborliness" was emphasized by Dr. Clinchy.

"Recent gains in inter-faith amity, as a result of Brotherhood Day and President Roosevelt's emphasis upon co-operation among those of different faiths for the common good," he said, "must be consolidated.

"Religious leaders are considerably heartened by the spirit of good will and closer understanding developing here among Protestants, Catholics and Jews in contrast to the spirit of hatred which is being fostered in some countries abroad."

Father Ahern urged his auditors to work for protection of "eternal verities, which are the basis of any adequate solution of moral and religious problems."

Rabbi Lazaron declared religion's sense of justice and humanity should be united against all prejudices.

The pilgrimage was commended by Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, of Washington Cathedral. The Rev. John K. Cartwright presided.

Policemen Chase, Capture Speeders

Policeman C. M. Thomsen and Sergt. Earl Thomas, of Takoma Park (Md.), were forced into a 65-mile-an-hour chase through the streets of Takoma Park yesterday when they pursued a car with three Negro passengers.

The car was stopped at Georgia avenue and Van Buren street, in the District, where James Thomas, 705 Fairmont street northwest, driver, and two companions, Lewis Lytle, 6349 Blair road, and Dora Thornton, Lamond place, were held for District police. Thomas was arrested by District police, who charged him with speeding, passing three stop signs, driving without a permit and joy riding. The two other passengers were charged with joy riding. E. P. Curley, 6909 Fifth street northwest, owner of the car, said he had not given Thomas permission to drive the car, but only clean it. The case is scheduled for today in Police Court.

Shooting Suspect Questioned, Freed

Charles ("Rags") Warring, 37, 2520 K street northwest, surrendered yesterday for questioning in the numbers game shooting Saturday at Twenty-fifth street and Pennsylvania avenue of James McEddy, colored, 1109 O street northwest.

McEddy, only slightly wounded, was unable to identify Warring in a police line-up. Warring then was released.

McEddy and the unidentified man who shot him were quarreing over a numbers slip.

Rabbi Metz to Talk.

Rabbi Solomon Metz will speak before the institutes of the Jewish Community Center tomorrow at 8:30 p. m. on Lion Feuchtwangler's latest book, "The Jew in Rome." Louis Ottenberg will preside and there will be open discussion after the address.

Wife Will Accompany President on Campaign

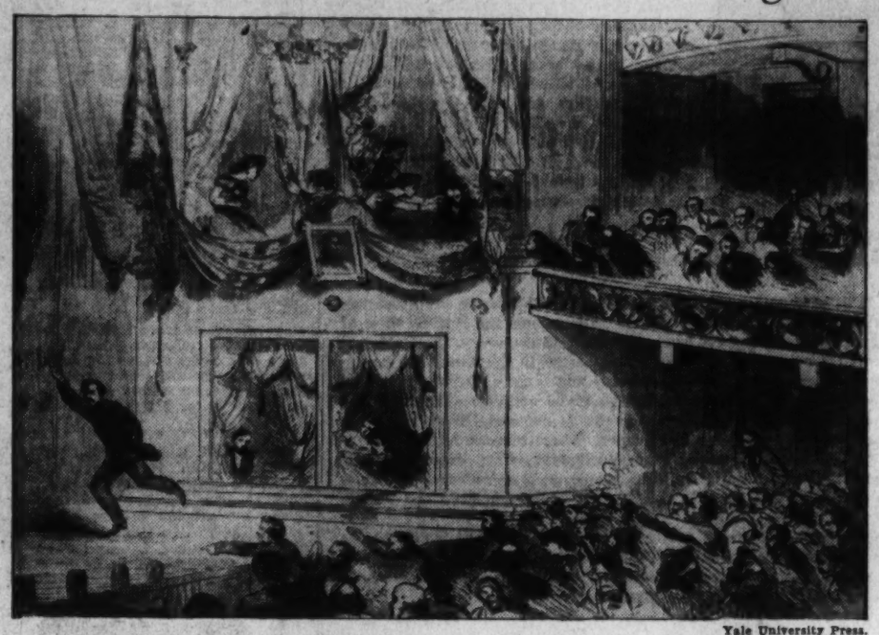
Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt said today that she will accompany her husband on the campaign jaunts of the summer but will make no political speeches herself.

The President, said Mrs. Roosevelt at her press conference, was surprised to read recently published purported schedule of campaign speeches which would keep him "on the go" all summer.

Veterans Unit to Dance.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of Washington Post No. 58, Jewish War Veterans, of the United States, will hold a dinner dance tonight at 8:30 p. m. at the Club Habana. Mrs. Sidney B. Diamond is in charge of arrangements, with Mrs. Joseph J. Berlin and Mrs. Lawrence Goldberg assisting.

Lincoln Assassinated 71 Years Ago Today; Historic Ford's Theater Almost Forgotten



Yale University Press.

The assassination of Lincoln at Ford's Theater, 71 years ago today. The picture, which shows John Wilkes Booth on the stage after he shot the President, appeared in Harper's Weekly, April 29, 1865.

Few People Are Attracted to 'Museum' Where President Was Shot.

By Frederic B. Tuttle.

The taxi driver looked puzzled and scratched his head.

"Let's see," he kept repeating. "Ford's Theater? Must be a new one in town. Oh, you mean the Lincoln Museum? It's been so long since I've taken anyone there I've almost forgotten where it is. People don't go there these days, you see——"

After dodging a street car and swooping around a corner the taxi slowed down.

It seemed to become larger, and the sputter of the motor seemed to change, too. The driver seemed to have put on a top hat, and instead of the steering wheel he held a whip which he flicked over the flanks of a team of horses—heavy steeds, for the Cavalry during the past four years of the war between the States had taken the nimbler animals that might be used for mounts.

The street car was gone, and so were the dozens of automobiles. Indeed, the cab had become a victoria, and the streets were dusty, and there were other carriages clattering around in the gaslight that flooded the streets.

A newsboy came alongside the victoria selling the Washington Chronicle, which had a makeup of solid type, with no headlines or pictures. The date on the masthead was April 14, 1865.

Lincoln Needed Relaxation.

At the corner of Tenth and E streets the driver turned and smiled politely, and said something about waiting in line. The sidewalks were thronged with soldiers in blue uniforms, with the hard lines of war written all over their faces. The blue was bright and pretty, and in the distance a gun caisson rattled toward the southwest.

The ladies were lovely, with doll-like faces, in shawls and hoop-skirts that whisked as they neared this building and that.

"We may have to wait, sir," said the driver.

"You see, sir, President Lincoln is coming to see 'Our American Cousin.' He's tired, the President, and the relaxation will do him good. The war is over, and my son has come home.

"Well, here we are, sir."

The lobby of the theater was ablaze with lamps. The Presidential box was hung with flags, and the railing was draped with the Stars and Stripes.

Mr. Lincoln was entering. The audience rose to its feet as one. Applause was as thundering as the guns at Gettysburg.

Surrounded by his aids and the members of his party he took his seat. The play had already started, but the actors halted until the ovation was over. Mr. Lincoln sat down.

With him was Mrs. Lincoln, smiling happily in her evening gown, and Maj. Rathbone, spic and span in his dress uniform, with his fiance, pretty Clara Harris. Outside the box, to the rear, paced a lone sentry.

The play delighted the audience. Faces sad with the grief of war broke into smiles. The President leaned forward, following every word that was said on the stage. It was his rest and he needed it.

A Shot Rings Out.

At about a quarter to 10 a caped figure crept by the spot where the guard should have been. The sentinel had gone to the gallery to watch the show. Mr. Lincoln would have wanted that, but not Maj. Rathbone.

Suddenly there was a shot. Hundreds of eyes shifted to the Presidential box.

The figure poised on the rail and the President slumped forward. Then the stranger leapt to the stage, among the startled actors.

"Sic semper tyrannis!" he cried, and ran limping into the wings.

"The President has been shot!" some one cried.

"Catch him!" shrieked the people who had come to forget killing and enjoy themselves.

John Wilkes Booth was at large, and the President might die. Booth was the murderer. Horses galloped this way and that, and hoofs thundered over the streets to the southeast.

Hunt Assassin All Night.

They searched for the assassin all that night. Later they learned his route was out F street, over New Jersey avenue, across the Capitol Grounds, out Pennsylvania avenue, then down Eleventh street to the Anacostia River. He made his getaway through the southeast.

Next morning the sad-faced crowds heard that the President was dead, the South had lost a great friend, and the Nation was in mourning.

As a matter of fact, the victoria was gone again, and so were the people of the theater in their quaint garb of yesteryear.

The victoria had become a taxi once more, and klaxons sounded in the street. The taxi was parked.

"This must be it," the driver said, "but nobody comes here much any more. Are you a stranger?"

"No, but tomorrow is the seventy-first anniversary of Lincoln's assassination."

"Oh," said the driver. "Well, you've probably been asleep. The fare's 40 cents."

Promptly at 4:30 a guard went around shooing the children who had been so engrossed in the life and death of the Emancipator out of the building.

One old man lingered on the steps, and seemed to be looking out of a cab of a mellower era.

3 Girl Scouts Find White House A Perfectly Safe Place to Live

Three District Girl Scouts found the White House a perfectly safe place to live in yesterday—with no rugs that slipped under one's feet, no stray cakes of soap on the bathroom floors, nor sharp knives left around where children could get at them.

The girls, Barbara Ramseyer, 15; Ann Shivers and Sibley Rober Rogers, both 13, made a "safety at home" inspection of the Presidential mansion to discover what "hazards" existed. Their findings were to have been broadcast in an interview with Mrs. Roosevelt over a Nation-wide hook-up on the Women's Radio Review program.

The broadcast went off on schedule but listeners who expected to learn that the White House, like most of the homes in this country, abounded with innumerable hazards to the inhabitants were disappointed. The scouts found all the fireplaces screened, the medicine bottles in the bathroom chests clearly labeled so that rubbing alcohol would not be mistaken for cough syrup, and the hot faucets provided with ample safeguards to prevent scalding.

Actually, the girls were far too impressed by the White House surroundings really "to look hard" for hazards. At the outset of the tour, they shied at asking questions, while none of the three ventured into odd corners to see what she could find.

As the tour progressed, the girls asked more and more questions. In particular they wanted to know whether they were pads under the rugs to keep them from slipping; whether there was ample lighting on all the stairways, whether there were automatic fire controls and what precautions were taken in icy weather to keep visitors from slipping.

No Prayers

Because it was Good Friday two men charged with trespassing were sentenced to spend 15 minutes in church "kneeling in penitence to God and being sorry for what you have done" by Police Court Judge Edward M. Curran.

Yesterday the men, Nathan Dodson and Casimir Wesolowski, faced Judge Curran again. Policeman F. M. Lewis, of the Twelfth Precinct, who charged the men with vagrancy, said instead of going to church they returned to their "hobo jungle" near the Sisters' College in Terra Cotta, D. C. They were drinking "canned heat," the policeman testified.

Judge Curran sent Wesolowski to jail for 60 days on the vagrancy charge. Dodson was sentenced to serve 60 days on the vagrancy charge and 25 days on a disorderly conduct count.

When Judge Curran asked the men when they had appeared in court before they told him Friday.

The judge then declared:

"You broke faith with me—both of you. You had your chance and failed to make the most of it. The court can show you no mercy now."

Claw Device Drive Lauded By Citizens

Kalorama Group Hears Talk on Housing by P. M. Pettit.

A resolution commending the police vice squad's recent drive to stop operation of claw machines was adopted at last night's meeting of the Park View Citizens Association.

In another resolution, the association commended People's Counsel William A. Roberts for the conduct of his position during the past year.

An appropriation of $10 for the Park View Community Center was voted.

The group took no action on a letter from the American Automobile Association urging it to support the proposed twice-yearly compulsory inspection of motor vehicles. At a previous meeting the association had opposed this proposal.

A resolution of regret at the death of J. H. Pellen, treasurer of the association, was prepared at the meeting of the Piney Branch Citizens Association. A committee was named to attend Pellen's funeral at 9 a. m. today at Sacred Heart Church. The treasurer was the retired chief of the engineering division of the Reclamation Service, Interior Department, and has long been active in the association. He died Saturday. His home was 4504 Fourteenth street northwest.

The housing problem was discussed at the meeting of the Kalorama Citizens Association by Pertholf M. Pettit, assistant director of PWA housing. He spoke on general housing conditions of the country and answered questions from members at the conclusion of his address.

The showing of a motion picture under auspices of the American Automobile Association was a feature of the meeting of the Hill Crest Citizens Association. The association's efforts to secure an elementary school in the neighborhood have a brighter prospect, it was reported.

Southeast Men Meet.

The Southeast Business Men's Association last night voted to request District authorities that the playgrounds adjacent to public schools be opened from 3 in the afternoon until sundown. They also decided to ask that newly filled-in land in the rear of Congressional Cemetery be made into a playground.

Officers elected follow: President, Clarence F. Donohoe; vice president, C. Dick English; secretary, Louis F. Frick; treasurer, Alex J. Berlin, and sergeant-at-arms, Arthur Schaffer.

Society Schedules Orphans' Benefit

The St. Vincent de Paul Society will hold a card party at the Willard Hotel April 23. The society will use the funds to help establish an educational fund for orphans.

According to a recent survey made by the society of boys who left St. Joseph's Orphanage from 1928 to 1935, only 10 out of 165 completed a high school course. Another 15 started high school, but were forced to stop because of financial difficulties.

One of the few who were able to complete the course, a boy whose parents died when he was 10 years old, was only able to do so by working part of each year. It took him seven years to finish high school.

Continue Education, Takoma Seniors Urged

Prof. H. A. Morrison, president of the Washington Missionary College, Takoma Park, Md., urged more than 100 high school seniors to continue their education through college when he spoke last night at the banquet marking the close of the college's annual "visiting day."

Others who spoke to the youths, guests of the college, were Roger Wilcox, president, and Jessie Tupper, vice president of the senior class.

The fabulous figure of that white-plumed Gascon warrior with the courage of a regiment; that "man of mighty words" and prodigious proboscis who, by the limpid poetry of his heart, could woo for others the beauteous creature he could not win for himself, this week treads the boards of the National Theater for the last time.

Last night Cyrano de Bergerac, pacing the stage he has so often trod before, brought new luster and new renown to the name of Walter Hampden, his only authentic creator behind the footlights of the present-day playhouse.

He duelled with the grace of the master while he composed ballads to the victims of his unerring blade; he dispersed rabbles, outnumbering him 100 to 1, in the exurberance of a triumph of swordsmanship and a seemingly imminent one of the heart; he purred romantic cadences into the ear of his beloved, that another might win her hand in marriage, and flaunted death that those he cherished might live in the happiness he had been denied.

If, as Mr. Hampden insists, this is his farewell tour in the magnificent measures of the Brian Hooker English version of the heroic Rostand comedy, the native stage will seem strangely denued of one of its most precious adornments in seasons that are to come.

Star Perfectly Equipped.

"Cyrano de Bergerac" is a metrical drama that fulfills the highest functions of the theater. It is engrossingly entertaining, colorful, vivid and exciting, without sacrifice of those gentler qualities of which gossamer dreams and songs of the heart are spun.

It is a pure work of supererogation to suggest at this time that Walter Hampden is the one actor on the contemporary American stage with the full equipment essential to the realization of the complete measure of "Cyrano's" charm, movement and power. In stature, richness and resonance of voice and that infinite variety of gesture, intonation, by-play and embellishment that comes with the experience of years of distinguished playing, he is the supreme Gascon guardsman of his generation.

The long cast appearing in the star's support in this thickly peopled spectacle includes many who have been seen here in the same roles before. Robert Hudson, Ernest Rowan, Katharine Warren and others, if memory mistakes not, walk upon the scene as familiar and welcome figures in the play.

Are Congenially Cast.

Mr. Hudson is the mischievous Comte de Guiche; Mr. Rowan the faithful Le Bret and Miss Warren, the lovely and liltingly effective Roxane.

Wilton Graff appears in the role of the mute Christian de Neuvillette, through whose inarticulate rapture Cyrano, by proxy, pours out his own passionate devotion to his beautiful but unattainable Roxane. Ragueneau, the poetic bake-shop proprietor, is played with fine drollery by Hannam Clark. The numerous others in the extensive ensemble execute roles of varying degrees of importance with uniform efficiency.

The costumes are picturesque and colorful and the settings, as usual, massive and wholly in the atmosphere and period of the drama. Last night's applause made it transparently clear that there is no discriminating theatergoer but will hope that Mr. Hampden will alter his decision to make his abandonment of this tremendously fascinating and vital vehicle permanent.

Pierce Hall

"MEET THE WIFE." The Pierce Hall Players present the comedy in three acts by Lynn Starling, staged by Howard F. Wentworth, with Frank S. Koonce as stage manager. Stage setting by Hilding Beit. At Pierce Hall, April 13 and 14. Reviewed Monday evening by Richard Q. Jones.

Changing its dramaturgic pace and presenting its second forthright comedy in many seasons, the Pierce Players last evening turned in a creditable performance of Lynn Starling's comedy of matrimonial mix-ups, "Meet the Wife," before one of the Players' largest and most enthusiastic audiences.

While the players individually and collectively deserve a great deal of credit for their fine work, more than passing mention should be paid the one who really manipulated the production, carefully balancing the moments of levity with those of a more serious nature to make a smooth running, entirely enjoyable performance. To Howard F. Wentworth, the director, be the credit for this usually thankless task.

Of the players, Jack Aracey was the outstanding performer, limning the role of the self-satisfied, egocentric suitor—the favored of mother (but not of daughter)—with positive brilliance. Although he finally was ousted from the household, he acquitted himself with such discretion that one felt the character got what was coming to him and at the same time was sorry for Mr. Aracey himself.

In the role of the wife, who suddenly finds herself with two husbands, Elinor Cox Karsten did a nice Mary Boland job, with F. Ellwood Allen, making his local debut as the first husband turned author, and Arthur Morley, as the rather weak and rebellious husband No. 2, turning in sincere supporting performances.

Young love is pleasantly furnished by Nell Childs, as the charming daughter with a mind of her own, and Clarence W. Moore, as the young newspaperman-suitor. The household's domestic staff is depicted by Milford Clark and Margaret Osterwald.

Thousands View Kenwood Blooms

The cherry blossoms of Kenwood, community of the Kennedy-Chamberlin Development Co., in nearby Maryland, were viewed by 25,000 persons Sunday and thousands yesterday.

Visitors from many parts of the country have motored through the subdivision since its Japanese cherry trees have blossomed, and numerous cars bearing California license tags were observed.

There are more cherry trees of the "yoshino" variety in Kenwood than around the Tidal Basin. At every 50-foot interval on one side of the roads of this development, "yoshino" trees have been set, to be staggered with a similar planting on the other side, thus placing a tree at every 25-foot interval. To afford a contrast to the white petals of the "yoshinos," "kwansans," "benzoans" and "weepers," pink-flowering varieties, are planted on the lawns and parked spaces.

About The Showshops

Having encountered such fulsome panegyrics on numerous previous occasions during the passage of the years in the theater, I took the wired reports of Broadway's reception of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's screen production of "The Great Ziegfeld" with a grain of salt—in fact a whole cellar full of it—until I had viewed the Philadelphia premiere of this amazing picture in the Chestnut Street Opera House Sunday night.

BELL.

Not even the most extravagant of its appraisals does the picture more than simple and unadorned justice.

From the days of "The Great Train Robbery," the first film attempting anything approaching a dramatic continuity, down to the present, there never has been a product of the cinema that can be compared with this marvelously blended combination of biographical drama, romance, comedy, music and magnificence.

"The Great Ziegfeld" is said to have cost $2,000,000 to produce. In the cool and unimpassioned retrospect of 24 hours after having viewed its glittering splendor, imposing cast and reasonably authentic re-creation of a past era in the playhouse, as well as today's in its most effulgent expression, I would be inclined to consider that estimate an understatement rather than an exaggeration.

* * * *

It is, of course, one of the most difficult things the dramatist encounters in the pursuit of his craft to attempt the revivification of figures that are, or have been, virtually contemporary. Ziegfeld was too well known to too many living people in the theater to be effectually reincarnated in the vibrant and largely staccato person of William Powell, just as Anna Held, a Parisienne to her fingertips and the last syllable of her Gallic accent, is not at all re-embodied in the Teutonic person of Luise Rainer. These two are no more physically or temperamentally the counterparts of the characters they portray than you and I are. This, however, is no reflection upon the integrity of "The Great Ziegfeld" as a finely conceived and incomparably well executed pictorial representation of the career of a super-showman. But it is still true that the more one is able to detach himself from intimate recollections of acquaintanceships and personal contacts extending over the last three or four decades in the theater, the greater "The Great Ziegfeld" becomes.

* * * *

To William Anthony McGuire, for the skill he has displayed in the fashioning of his story, goes chief credit for the excellence of the picture. An author who provided the "books" of several of Ziegfeld's most impressive productions, Mr. McGuire knew his subject well from personal association through the years. Thus with a minimum violation of the chronology of events in the Ziegfeld career—although some was necessary—he was able to piece together a story, beginning on the Midway Plaisance at the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago in 1893, and progressing to Ziegfeld's death in California, that traces with more than usual fidelity the outstanding events in the life of the odd combination of inborn traits, habits, impulses, extravagances and whims that made up the idiosyncrasies of the Ziegfeld character.

The musical numbers that have been interwoven with the story of the man's life are the logical outgrowth of his expanding genius and success in the theater. They fit naturally and with a continuous crescendo of gorgeousness, beauty and magnitude into the growth of a unique career that was marked by a similar accretion of impressiveness as the years advanced. Here, in short, is a unity of purpose, design and fulfillment that forms a cohesive and coherent narrative at the same time that it staggers the senses with its opulence and sheer loveliness.

The one anachronistic and discordant note in the entire musical structure of "The Great Ziegfeld" lies in the introduction of snatches of Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" into that overpowering vocal and instrumental mosaic that is the rejuvenated and embellished version of "A Pretty Girl Is Like a Melody." Gershwin had not even thought of the "Rhapsody," much less written it, at the time of the scene represented on the screen. I refuse to quibble over this brief lapse, however, since it is wholly on the side of a multiplied variety and musical flamboyance in an ensemble that, in itself, probably cost more to stage than any complete production "Ziegfeld" ever put on. Sunday night's standing-room audience in Philadelphia burst into a thunder of spontaneous applause before this unbelievably sumptuous number was half completed. The same tribute was paid several other scenes of comparable novelty and expansiveness later in the picture. No matter what they might have charged for seats to this unparalleled production, it would have been worth it.

* * * *

The Sabbath evening junket to Philadelphia was engineered with the customary punctilious solicitation the Loew organization in Washington always manifests toward its guests. Proceeding to Quakerdom on the Congressional, the five drama desks of the local press were handsomely gorged at a midtown hotel within a stone's throw of the theater and then given the choicest seat locations in the orchestra, by dint of the management's having denuded the ticket agencies of their best seats. The house was completely sold out and hundreds turned away at the door, where searchlights were flashing to the high heavens and other concomitants of a big-time "Hollywood permeer" were in evidence.

During intermission, one felt rather at home, meeting Meyer Davis, former Washington orchestra tycoon and restaurateur; Roscoe Drissel, erstwhile manager of Loew's Columbia; Mark Silvers, Norman Pyle and others of the industry's expert publicists; Joseph R. Vogel, of the New York home office of Loew's, Inc.; Al Zimbalist, from the West Coast technical department of M-G-M, on hand to be sure the sound reproduction was all that it should be—and it was—and numerous other old friends in and out of the industry.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Hollywood, April 12.

Grace Moore, despite all those front page yarns, will return to Hollywood in August to make another flicker for Columbia . . . Ted Healy's big romantic interest is a wealthy Pasadena gal, Dorothy Roberts . . . Max Baer, visiting the cinema city this week, admits that he is writing popular songs. Step-in Fetchit wants to call the Central avenue district—Harlemwood . . . Although the character Rosalind never appears in the play "Romeo and Juliet," she is played by Katharine de Mille in the flicker, "Romeo and Juliet." However, Miss de Mille's role is in pantomime, for not one line of additional dialogue has been added to Will Shakespeare's scenario . . . Gertrude Michael is again taking off-stage direction from Roubel Mamoulian . . . George Kaufmann has a philosophy about the movies and the large salary they pay . . . Kaufmann says: "They owe it to us. Look what they've done to our business."

GRACE MOORE.

Moss Hart was talking about Marilyn Miller. He told a story that Miss Miller related the night that he took her out to discuss about her playing in "As Thousands Cheer" . . . Marilyn Miller said: "Last night I was lonely. I felt that I wanted to be on a stage. I got in a taxi and drove to the New Amsterdam Theater. It was 3 o'clock in the morning. I hadn't been there for many years, but the stage doorman knew me. I walked past him and he just looked at me. I stood in the center of the stage. There was nothing on the stage but the pilot light. I stood there looking out at the empty seats, then, I started to cry . . . When I finished crying I raced up the stairs to my dressing room, the same room of 'Sunny' and 'Rosalie' . . . I don't know how long I stayed there. Then I walked out of the theater, saying 'Goodby' to the stage doorman. That was the last time I was on the stage of the New Amsterdam."

* * * *

Margot Grahame has another boy friend this week, Philip Reed . . . Mussolini won't permit the flicker, "Give Us This Night," to be shown in Italy unless the spaghetti eating sequence is deleted . . . Jack Oakie will do a series of radio broadcasts when he returns to Hollywood . . . At Metro every writer is now given a slip of paper and on it they must write: The name of the story they are working on, when they last had a conference with the supervisor, how many pages they turned in, etc. . . . As one scenarist remarked, "We do more writing on these slips than we do on the scenarios." . . . The main part of the action of "The Charge of the Light Brigade" now takes place in India . . . R. C. Sheriff, who is in London, is writing the screen play of "Goodbye Mr. Chips," and mails it, scene by scene, to Irving Thalberg. Those who have read it say it is excellent . . . James Hilton, who wrote "Goodbye Mr. Chips," is also working for Thalberg—on the screen play of "Camile."

* * * *

Clifford Odets has completed the scenario of "The General Dies at Dawn," and the studio is very satisfied with it . . . Radio Pictures has been making huge offers to George and Ira Gershwin to do the musical score for the Fred Astaire picture following "Never Gonna Dance." Jascha Heifetz was talking to Harpo Marx, telling him about his career. Said Heifetz: "I supported my family ever since I was four years old" . . . "And before that," said Harpo, "I suppose you were just a bum" . . . The ox who has a big scene in the flicker, "The Good Earth," is a cow.

* * * *

Max Reinhardt wants Paul Muni to play the role of "Dante" when he directs that flicker . . . Arthur Tracy, the "Street Singer," is more than attentive to Barbara Pepper . . . Katharine Hepburn always has her lunch at the table with Director John Ford, Dudley Nichols and a few producers in the Radio commissary . . . They always play the "match game" to see who pays for every one's lunch. It's great fun watching Hepburn play . . . "Valiant is the Word for Carrie" has been okayed for pictures by the Hays' office but they insist that the prostitute can't accept money; also that she can't become a success as she does in the novel . . . William Rankin, the scenario writer purchased a house in a deserted section . . . To protect himself, riding home late at night he bought a gun to keep in the car . . . The first night he had the gun, driving home, he was held up . . . The only thing the hold-up man took was the gun.

* * * *

Gen. John J. Pershing visited the Twentieth Century-Fox studios last week and toured the place . . . He was introduced to Shirley Temple . . . They had rather a long conversation . . . Gen. Pershing was very interested in Shirley . . . She got out her autograph book and showed it to him . . . Gen. Pershing inquired about various signatures . . . Coming to a certain page, Shirley proudly said "That's Bill Robinson's autograph. Certainly you know him" . . . Gen. Pershing answered that he didn't . . . After he left, Shirley said to her mother "That Gen. Pershing, he's a funny man. He doesn't know anybody" . . . Con Conrad was complaining about a friend, now a big movie producer, who snubbed him . . . "He certainly knew me when he needed me," said Conrad. "I helped him. I gave him a check for $250. The check was no good—but it was all the money I had in the world."

Attack to Be Investigated.

Grafton, W. Va., April 13.—The Taylor County grand jury, which convenes here tomorrow, will investigate the case of Gerald Hughes, 37, foreman at the Federal flood-control dam construction here, who is in the county jail facing criminal charges in regard to a 9-year old girl. He said he was intoxicated at the time.

Plays Herself With Huge Success!

Nobody can play Fannie Brice quite like Fannie Brice herself. This is overwhelmingly demonstrated in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's stupendous—no other word will do—picturization of the professional career of the late Florenz Ziegfeld, jr., presented on the screen under the title of "The Great Ziegfeld" and to be seen for the first time in the Capital in the National Theater, beginning next Sunday night. "The Great Ziegfeld" will be shown as a road-show attraction, with two performances daily after Sunday night's premiere, all seats reserved. It consumes more than three hours of actual running time.

New Principle Gives Cartoon Films Depth

Third Dimension Attained by Background Device Being Perfected.

New York, April 13 (AP).—Three-dimensional animated cartoons which can be shown with regular movie projection machine equipment and without use of any gadget by audiences were announced here today by Max Fleischer, pioneer in the animated cartoon field.

Fleischer declares his invention has passed the experimental stage and that full-length animated cartoons using the third dimension throughout will be released within six months.

Without announcing results of two and one-half years of experimentation, Fleischer already has incorporated the principle in short sequences of two pictures which have been released ("Song of the Birds" and "Time for Love.")

Fleischer obtains the third-dimensional effect by foreshortening the perspective of the camera to 6 feet and using a special lens which does not focus directly on the objects photographed. In order to bring the vanishing point—which is infinity for the human eye and approximately 15 miles for the camera—to within 6 feet of the lens, it is necessary to construct backgrounds which are scaled in this perspective.

How It Is Done.

The cartoonist demonstrated this with several landscapes. The houses, instead of being built as on regular miniature sets, have the same lines as houses or other objects in a drawing which is in perspective.

Only when this background is moving does the finished film give the impression of third dimension. This handicap Fleischer claims to have overcome by imperceptibly moving the background even when the cartoon characters are not in motion. It is this latter principle which will be used in the production of full-length three-dimensional cartoons.

The animated objects in the new cartoons will be drawn, as at present, on transparent celluloid, but will be photographed in a frame set against the moving background instead of present backgrounds which are flat drawings.

Adaptable to Features.

In its present form, Fleischer says, the principle could not be applied to regular motion pictures, but he believes an adaptation of the principle eventually can be used to produce the same effect in real-life films.

In order to produce the three-dimensional cartoons, Fleischer has constructed three huge camera frames in his studios on Broadway. A short distance from the camera lens is the frame for holding the animated objects to be photographed, and beyond that a semi-circular turntable on which the scaled backgrounds are placed. The third-dimensional effect may be obtained in both color and black-and-white pictures.

Fleischer, one-time cartoonist for the Brooklyn Eagle, and later art editor of Popular Science Monthly magazine, has been producing animated cartoons since 1916.

200,000 Fans to See Majors Open; 25,000 Are Expected Here

Revised Line-Ups On View; Forecast For Close Races

Tigers and Cubs Again Favored as Three-Game Series Faces Trial; Fair Weather Is Predicted for the Entire Program.

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

New York, April 14.—With a belated but timely assist promised by the weather man and a salute to the addicts of America's great national sport, 16 major league clubs will put on ceremonial view tomorrow the results of the most drastic player shake-up in the memory of the oldest bleacher inhabitant.

Changes embracing approximately one-third of the aggregate line-ups of all American and National League outfits will be put to their first test before close to 200,000 fans in eight cities. They forecast the bitterest sort of pennant scrambles with at least three and possibly four clubs waging the main fight in each circuit.

The Nation's No. 1 fan, President Roosevelt, will throw out the first ball at Washington, where the home-town Nationals entertain the New York Yankees and a good share of the Government partakes of a half-holiday in keeping with annual custom.

Good Weather.

Weather forecasts indicate a silver lining to the clouds that have hung persistently over the gloomiest spring training season in many years. Fair weather is promised for the entire major league program, with temperatures lower in the East than in the Middle West.

All hands will welcome a "break" after almost continuous rain since the first of April. Opening day attendance will not surpass any records, but figures to be considerably above last year. It took two days to complete the 1935 getaway card, with frigid weather prevailing, and the aggregate attendance was 148,687.

The opening guns of the championship campaigns will boom loudest west of the Alleghenies, with the flag-winning Chicago Cubs invading the stronghold of their bitterest rivals in St. Louis, and the World Champion Detroit Tigers moving into the bailiwick of the ambitious Cleveland Indians, but the crowds will be biggest at the other two National League openers.

Brooklyn's entirely reconstructed team, flanked by loyal rooters from Flatbush, will move across the river to meet New York's Giants before a near-capacity crowd of 55,000 at the Polo Grounds.

All told, 115,000 fans are expected to witness the National League's introductory show, featuring a pitching duel at St. Louis between the great Dizzy Dean, erstwhile super-heteorodyne of the holdouts, and Lonnie Warneke, No. 1 man of the Chicago sharp-shooting staff. Dean got the opening day summons after Manager Frankie Frisch originally primed his newcomer, Roy Parmelee, late of the Giants, for duty.

The four American League openers, it is estimated, will draw no more than 80,000, due mainly to the fact that the Tigers and Yankees are obliged by the schedule to open away from their enlarged home parks. Top crowds of 25,000 likely will see Lynwood (Schoolboy) Rowe, youthful pitching giant of the Tigers, oppose Mel Harder, big chief of the Indians, while Wes Ferrell goes to the firing line for the elaborately built Boston Red Sox against the Philadelphia Athletics, survivors of baseball's biggest "sell-out."

Three-Game Series.

This year's campaign will offer the fans a quicker chance to size up their favorites and determine whether the experts were justified in establishing the Detroit Tigers and the St. Louis Cardinals as pennant choices. The three-game series plan will operate for the first time, a fresh set of "openers" will be played April 17. Intersectional competition will get under way earlier than ever before, with East-West rivalry beginning April 28.

Both pennant races appear likely to be close. The fight for National League leadership hardly could be any hotter than it was last September when the Cubs came galloping from behind with a 21-game winning streak to overhaul the Giants and the Cardinals. All three teams, plus the improved Pittsburgh Pirates, figure to participate in this year's tussle. Betting men like the Cubs' chances to repeat but baseball writers figure the Cardinal pitching staff, with Parmelee joining the celebrated Dean Brothers, as the most probable dominating factor in the campaign.

Opening Day Program.

12 m.—Goldman's Band entertains.
1:45 p. m.—Yankees' batting practice.
2:15 p. m.—Yankees' fielding practice.
2:30 p. m.—Washington fielding practice.
2:30 p. m.—United States Army Band entertains.
2:45 p. m.—Vice President Garner and Clark Griffith lead teams' march to flagpole.
2:50 p. m.—The President arrives.
3 p. m.—The President throws out first ball and game starts.

Delaney Wins Verdict Over Massare

Buffalo Heavy Is Awarded Unanimous Decision in Dull Contest.

By Bill McCormick.

The new-born comeback attempt of Charley Massare, once a leading heavyweight contender, came to a rather ignominious end last night as Al Delaney, the Buffalo beauty, tossed punches at his portly person for eight rounds to take a unanimous decision in the "feature" at Turner's Arena.

Perhaps Massare is not as washed up as an Easter parade. Perhaps Delaney's terrific punches wore him down to just a shadow of himself. But anyway, the contest was not pleasing, in fact might best be classified by the tearse, if bawdy, expression "lousy."

Many of the 2,000 expectant spectators had become disillusioned by the sixth round, when they started walking out on the proceedings. The arena threatened to become practically deserted in the seventh, but quite a few stayed for the finish after all as business picked up in the finale.

Delaney Partially to Blame.

Delaney is not to be absolved from all blame for the uninteresting interlude. He danced away, posed and jabbed with a left when might have been making a fight of it—and earned himself a knockout—by ripping in with both of his dangerous fists spitting knockout wallops.

At his normal fighting weight of 183 pounds, Massare was not as loaded with excess baggage as might be indicated by the balloon tire festoon of flesh draped around his midsection. He fought in his customary style, luring—or seeking to lure—Delaney in close, then pumping away at the midsection with both hands.

The trouble with it all, as far as he was concerned, was that his pumps to the brisket lacked the authority and speed they once knew—and therein probably lies the story of his defeat.

Delaney kept pecking away at Massare's noggin with a straight left and hook from bell to bell, throwing in a few right hands from long range for good measure. Only once or twice did he fire both hands with reckless abandon and when he did, it seemed inevitable that Massare would bite the dust. Which he might have done had not Delaney decided discretion was the better part of valor, too soon, in each instance.

Mader Meets Nichy.

Prior to the fight, it was announced that the winner would meet meet Billy Nichy here next Monday night. After the fight, Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn decided to use Eddie Mader with Nichy. All of which should give you an idea.

Bob Lowry, rehabilitated Washington welterweight, pounded his way to a well-deserved decision over Stanford Carrier, another promising local product, in a hard-fought six-round semifinal. Carrier was game and his punch presented an ever-present threat, but he was unable to cope with the winner's whirlwind tactics and experience.

Dean Wins Easily.

Irish Johnny Dean, an Irishman from Charlotte, N. C., scored a third-round technical knockout over Mike Cusinano, a New Orleans welterweight, in an interesting, although one-sided preliminary scheduled for six rounds.

Cusinano was bounced to the canvas three times in the second round and had been battered to the floor again when Referee Charley Reynolds called a halt to the uneven match.

Johnny Cabello, of New York, was awarded a split decision over Mooch Murphy, of Trenton, N. J., in a featherweight six-round preliminary.

Harris Entrusts Game to Newsom's Keeping

Rainville Net Victim at Pinehurst

Henderson, N. C. U., Wins by 4-6, 6-3 and 6-2 in North-South Play.

By the Associated Press.

Pinehurst, N. C., April 13.—Archibald Henderson, University of North Carolina player, upset the veteran Canadian Davis cupper, Marcel Rainville, of Montreal, in the singles division of the North and South Tennis Tournament which opened here today. The scores were 4—6, 6—3, 6—2.

Other matches ran true to form. Three of the four seeded entries advanced to the third round, but only J. Gilbert Hall, of New York, another veteran, had to work his way. Hall, seeded second, defeated Edward A. Muller, of New York, 6—2, 6—1, in the first round, and disposed of Morey Lewis, of Kenyon College at Gambier, Ohio, 7—5, 6—3 in his next match.

Donald Budge, the red-headed Davis Cup hope from California, who is seeded No. 1, entered the third round without picking up a racket. He drew a bye in the first, and advanced in the second by default of Herbert Vail, of Pinehurst.

The third-seeded Wilmer Hines, of Columbia, S. C., won his second round match from George Pryor, of Kenyon College, 6—3, 6—4, after having a bye in the opening round.

Newsom Predicts 5-1 Win for Nats

Buck Newsom, who insists on speaking for publication, yesterday graciously permitted the Yankees a run in his pre-game estimate of today's opening game.

"I figger with me out there pitching we'll beat them Yankees about 5 to 1," quoth Newsom. "It's kinda tough to shut a team like them out, you know. I figger I'll hold 'em to five or six hits and maybe get a couple myself."

Cronin Cautious; 'Did Not Predict Pennant'

By the United Press.

Boston, April 13.—Being the type of gent who doesn't like to put himself out on the end of a limb with pre-season predictions, Joseph Edward Cronin won't say the Boston Red Sox will win the 1936 American League pennant—but he doesn't say they won't.

If an introduction is necessary, Joe is the genial young man who shoulders the burden of piloting the most expensive array of baseball stars ever assembled on one club.

Most experts pick the world champion Detroit Tigers to make it three pennants in a row. But Hub fans and a majority of sports writers here say Owner Tom Yawkey's million-dollar playthings will cop the first bunting Boston has had in 18 years.

At his office on the top fringe of the grandstand at Fenway Park, where the Red Sox open against the Philadelphia Athletics tomorrow before some 25,000 to 30,000 fans, the mild-mannered boy manager with the jutting jaw expressed his own ideas on the subject today.

"At spring training camp I was quoted as saying we would win the pennant," Cronin remarked. "What I actually said was that the team that wins the flag will have to beat us."

Makings of Great Club.

"I think we have the makings of a great club this year," Joe said, "but it's too early to try and pick 'em. I look for a hot four-cornered fight between Detroit, Boston, New York and Cleveland—but that doesn't mean that Washington, St. Louis, Chicago or Philadelphia, for that matter, are out of it. They'll prove stumbling blocks."

"Most of the clubs have been strengthened during the winter so competition will be keener," Cronin observed. "I am confident that our added strength gives us what it takes to be up there in the thick of the fight. For example, we have power. * * *"

Here genial Joseph named Jimmy Foxx and "Flit" Cramer, who, with Infielder Eric McNair and Pitcher Johnny Marcum, came to Boston from the Athletics this winter in exchange for a generous slice of Yawkey's bankroll. And there are Heinie Manush, late of Washington, and Bill Werber, fielding, batting and base-stealing sensation of two years ago. Cronin modestly omitted himself, though a dangerous slugger in his own right.

"We have a well-balanced infield * * *"

There is Foxx at first, Oscar Melillo at second, Cronin at short, McNair at third and Johnny Kroner for utility duty.

Outfield Good.

Manush will be at left, Cramer at center and Werber at right with Melo Almada, Dusty Cooke and Bing Miller in reserve.

It was here that Cronin revealed for the first time that Werber will be the club's regular rightfielder. Werber, an infielder, hitherto has been a question mark in the Sox 1936 plans what with his ailing big toe, holdout trouble and a stormy temperament. But everything has been patched up and Bill has won himself a starting berth.

Dobie Injures Shoulder.

Newton, Mass., April 13 (AP).—Gil Dobie, Boston College football coach, suffered an injury which athletic officials said was either a broken or dislocated right shoulder while directing spring practice today.

Browns Lose To Cardinals By 6 to 3

Three Pitchers Fail to Last, Medwick Hits Circuit Clout.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, April 11.—A fifth-inning batting punch that put the skids under the Browns' second pitcher, Mike Meola, gave the Cardinals a 6-to-3 victory in the second of the two-game spring series today. The Browns won yesterday.

Tied at 1-all going into the fifth, Gelbert walked, Durocher tripped and Moore parked a home run in the leftfield seats to bring in 3 runs.

Medwick got a home run in the second inning. Clift, of the Browns, smashed a circuit blow in the sixth.

President to Toss Initial Ball For Nats-Yanks Clash

Bright Skies Are Predicted for Inaugural as Gomez Faces Newsom on Mound; 10,000 Seats on Sale Today.

By Shirley Povich,
Sports Editor of The Post.

A long-snouted White House car will nose into Griffith Stadium at 2:50 o'clock this afternoon, the United States Army Band will blare "Hail to the Chief," the President of the United States will greet the assembled 25,000 fans with his hands-aloft wave, the click-click of camera shutters will be heard for blocks around, and the opening ball game of the season will be on—almost.

The Line-Ups.

There will remain the formality of posing again in the Presidential box abaft the Washington dugout, and the business of throwing out the first ball. Mr. Roosevelt, possessor of one of the best Presidential throwing arms, will warn photographers to duck, if he follows precedent, and then cut loose with a pitch that will promptly cost the ball its identity as a baseball and elevate it to the status of a prized memento for the Washington player lucky enough to recover it in the wild scramble that always ensues.

Thereupon the Umpire in Chief will take charge and with a gruff "Get Going!" or similar unelegant command will send the Washington Senators and New York Yankees out on the diamond.

Taking the Weather Man at his word—fair and warmer—Griffith Stadium officials anticipate a crowd of no less than 25,000 with tickets selling briskly throughout yesterday. A few thousand grandstand and box seats in the outfield sections still remain on sale and at 11 o'clock this morning when the gates of the park will be thrown open, 10,000 bleacher seats will go on sale.

Newsom to Pitch.

Out there on the pitching mound for Washington will be the new idol of Washington fandom—Big Buck Newsom entrusted by Manager Bucky Harris with the Nats' pitching hopes in compliment to his recognition as the No. 1 pitcher on Harris' staff.

Doing battle against Newsom will be Lefty Gomez, prize left-hander of the Yankees' staff whose presence on the mound and apparent return to the pitching form that labeled him as the American League's premier southpaw for several years, doubtless will install the Yankees as the favorite to win today's game at odds varying from 7 to 5 to 8 to 5.

A treat that appeared in store for Washington fans throughout the winter—the appearance of Joe DiMaggio, sensational Yankee rookie, in his first big league game—apparently has been denied the Capital. DiMaggio has not yet fully recovered from a severe burn on his foot and Manager Joe McCarthy, of the Yankees, has indicated that it will be several days before the young outfielder will be sent into action.

The opening game of the 1936 pennant race finds Washington more than mildly excited and curious as to the manner in which Manager Harris' accent-on-youth ball team will conduct itself. Labeled a 20-to-1 shot in the pre-pennant race betting, the Nats launch their hopes with an admitted pitching weakness, a terrific batting attack, a clever defense and a new high in speed afoot.

Hill Leads Off.

When Jesse Hill leads off the batting order for Washington, he will be introducing himself officially to Washington fans as a Washington player. The fleet left fielder obtained from the Yankees in a trade last winter, has been the hero of reams of press notices by the correspondents in the South and strangely is cast against his former mates in his first start of the Nats.

Batting second and playing third base for the Nats will be not Buddy Lewis, the sensation of the Nats' training trip, but the veteran Ossie Bluege, a last-minute selection by Manager Harris, who chose to relieve the 19-year-old Lewis of the first-game pressure and rely upon the reliable Bluege, the leagues' prime utility man.

When Buddy Myer goes to bat in the third position for the Nats, Washington fans will be gazing upon the new batting champion of the American League, an honor gained by Myer last season.

Hitting in the clean-up role and playing centerfield for the Nats will be Jake Powell, the local boy who made good. Following Powell, Cecil Travis, converted into a shortstop this season, will go to bat, and in sixth place in the batting order Washington fans will see an old favorite, Carl Reynolds, acquired in the deal that sent Heinie Manush to Boston, Reynolds breaks into the line-up due to the presence of Gomez's left-handed pitching, which has caused Rightfielder Johnny Stone to be benched for the game.

Bringing up the rear of the batting order will be First Baseman Joe Kuhel and Catcher Cliff Bolton, the former showing evident signs of a return to the slugging form that made him a .323 hitter in 1933, and Bolton promising to offset with his power at bat the catching deficiences of which he has been accused.

Colonials Rally To Win Over Eagles, 6-5

Fifth Straight Victory; De Angelis' Relief Work Is Feature.

In the event that Washington fails to satisfy the fans' craving for winning diamond performances this season, District fans may obtain some measure of consolation from George Washington's nine which yesterday chalked up its fifth consecutive victory, a 6-to-5 triumph over Boston College.

Fresh from an easy win over Navy, the visitors did not expect the rough treatment they received on the Ellipse in plain view of a large holiday crowd, but not without a struggle did George Washington keep its record untarnished. The relief pitching of Vince De Angelis, coupled with a defensive letdown behind Pitcher Charlie O'Hara, of Boston, accounted for the Colonials' win.

DeAngelis, whose forte is a puzzling knuckle ball, entered the game in the seventh inning with the score deadlocked at 4-all and men on second and third. The first man to face him flied to center, scoring Capt. Tim Ready with the Eagles' fifth and final run—a run that temporarily established Raedy's team in the lead. Thereafter the slim portsider couldn't be reached with a 10-foot pole.

O'Hara, 19-year-old, 6-foot 4-inch left-hander, who is slated for a big league trial, performed well enough but fell victim to an error in the eighth when George Washington scored the tying and winning runs.

Mangrum Is Medal Winner in Jersey

Shoots 143 in Wildwood Golf; 4-Stroke Lead.

Wildwood, N. J., April 13 (AP).—Ray Mangrum, of Los Angeles, completed the 36-hole qualifying round in the Wildwood Golf Club's second annual open tournament today, with a total of 143, four strokes better than his nearest opponents.

Mangrum finished the first round, on a course swept by a sharp northwest wind, in 71, one over par, then wound up the day's play with a 72.

George Smith, of the Philadelphia Country Club, defending champion, and Clarence Hackney, of Atlantic City, tied for second with 147. Smith put together a first round of 76 with a 71, while Hackney combined rounds of 74 and 73.

$361 Mutuel Returned In 'Double'

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace Race Track, Md., April 13.—Jay Jay, wintered in the rolling country near Ellicott City and trained to perfection at this track, ran a surprising race to outclass his field in the Harford Handicap, $5,000 added opening day feature at this track. It was only fitting that the youngest member of the field of nine, should go legrolling on Easter Monday while his elders kept watch from a safe distance. In fact, Jay Jay rolled home by four lengths with little Ira Hanford doing his best to narrow the margin with a tight grip on the reins.

Bright Haven followed the Wise Counsellor colt to the wire to take second money by a length from Nautch. At various intervals along the stretch came six others including the favorite, Singing Wood, winner of the Bowie Inaugural. Singing Wood "didn't run a nickel's worth" in the words of a rooter in front of the press box who was in the act of tearing up a wad of pasteboards. The John Hay Whitney horse drew bettors like flies and closed at odds of 7 to 10.

Jay Jay Pays $29.70.

Those who had the courage to wager to win on a 3-year-old making his first start of the year against the best sprinters hereabouts, got a $29.70 mutuel.

"The Graw" as this track is popularly known, drew a 12,000 crowd as racing returned to the banks of the Susquehanna River and the shriek of the long shot player making his kill was the theme song of the afternoon.

The record daily double for this spring was recorded. Those who played the combination of Manatella in the first race and Night Cap in the third collected $361.70 for each $2 investment. After Mantella won the opener, the "if" board on the double showed an assortment of possible prices ranging from $87.50 on the combination ending with Sunrap to $986.70 as the reward should Green Mist win.

Bright Haven in Front.

Bright Haven was first to show in front when Starter Milton sent the field away in the feature race. Jay Jay was speeding along the rail, however, an wrested the lead from his rival before the stretch turn was reached. At that point, Jay Jay began to draw away to the surprise of most of the customers. Expected moves from the rear of the field failed to materialize.

Singing Wood, being steered wide for racing room, made a mild bid leaving the backstretch and then flattened out. Brown Twig saved ground entering the stretch along the rail but he had nothing left for the final drive. The farther Jay Jay went, the greater was his margin over Bright Haven. The latter, however, had daylight between him and the Howe Stable's Nautch.

There was no need for a picture of the finish of the first race. The Foxcatcher Farm's Manatella at a $31.40 mutuel, opened a lead soon after the break and bounced along to the wire with yards to spare over Gay Balko, the favorite from the Vanderbilt Stable. Double Scotch was a distant third in the field of nine juveniles, contesting over the usual 4½ furlongs course.

A. C. Compton's Apprehend scored a handy victory in the second race at 6 furlongs. Outrun by Character during the early part, Jockey Bobby Jones took his charge under slight restraint. When Character tired suddenly in the stretch Apprehend took command. Character wound up in third place behind a charging Naval Cadet. The winner paid on $8.90 mutuel.

Night Cap Triumphs.

Night Cap, a candidate for Saturday's Chesapeake Stakes, exhibited a neat burst of stretch speed to win the third race, the day's second 6-furlong race. The son of Nocturnal had a length and a half margin over Galmica after being sixth on the backstretch. Third money went to Green Mist, which set a keen pace for a half-mile. The winner was overlooked at a $23.20 mutuel.

Ross, winner of his last at Bowie, came through with a victory in the fifth race to pay an $8.80 mutuel. Venetian was second and the fifth favorite to fail. Kapena, which led by the most part of a city block along the backstretch, staggered into third money after a tour of a mile and one-sixteenth.

Thruster paraded to a five-length triumph in the sixth race. The son of Gallant Fox was Ira Hanford's second winner of the day and he had only to guide. Thruster opened a commanding lead and was galloping as he led Close Call and Mister Gander to the wire to pay a $6.60 mutuel.

The finale went to James Boy at a $20.80 mutuel. He had plenty of daylight to spare over Pencader and Autowin in a field of eight, competing at a mile and one-sixteenth.

FLYING TRAPEZE	(Berg)	118	1	2	9	9	8¼	12.85
KENNER	(Lynch)	118	4	5	7¾	8½	9	50.35

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MANATELLA, $31.40, $8.80, $4.10; GAY BALKO, $3.20, $2.40; DOUBLE SCOTCH, $3.60.

MANATELLA, crowded over on his field going to the turn, went into a long lead, withstood bold effort from GAY BALKO when straightened into the homestretch, then came away smartly when shaken up. GAY BALKO followed closest to the winner from the beginning, moved up stoutly entering the homestretch, but swerved repeatedly in the closing furlong and weakened at the end. DOUBLE SCOTCH raced forwardly under strong urging, saved ground, but could not menace the first two and barely lasted to outstay EJECTOR. Latter, forced to race on the outside, lost much ground at the stretch turn, but held on gamely. QUINCY could not engage the leaders. He was racing stoutly at the close. INDIANA was held safe. FLYING TRAPEZE was badly blocked in the opening furlong and forced to be taken up sharply. KENNER raced very green.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:11. Off at 3:12½. Winner, A. C. Compton's ch. g. (4), by Apprenension—Bantry Pass. Trained by H. G. Bedwell. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:23 3-5, 0:49, 1:15 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—APPREHEND, $8.90, $4.50, $3.00; NAVAL CADET, $20.70, $6.40; CHARACTER, $2.50.

APPREHEND, permitted to gain his best stride before moving to the leaders, rallied strongly to engage CHARACTER when straightened into the homestretch, took command inside the final furlong and held on stoutly to withstand NAVAL CADET. Latter improved his position steadily on the outside after being outrun in the first half-mile and closed with a bold rush. CHARACTER sprinted into a long lead, saved ground all the way, but flattened out badly after reaching the homestretch. XANDRA made up some ground in the last stages, but could not menace the leaders. DORMIDO lacked early speed and was never a factor. KEOKEE was done early. STEELHEAD lacked speed. PLAYBOOK stopped to a walk after five furlongs.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; allowances. The Pasebrook. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:41. Off at 3:47. Winner, A. W. Abbott's ch. c. (3), by Nocturnal—Ruth S. Trained by F. C. Travis. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:24, 0:49 2-5, 1:16 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NIGHTCAP, $23.20, $11.80, $7.00; GALMICA, $8.70, $5.20; GREEN MIST, $9.20.

NIGHTCAP worked his way up on the outside after being outrun to the stretch turn, closed fast in the last furlong and came out swiftly after displacing the leaders in the last sixteenth. GALMICA, slow to get going, circled his field and finished courageously. GREEN MIST showed good speed to open up a clear lead early, rallied strongly when challenged, but failed to withstand the winner's approaching finish. MY COLIN made a strong bid midway of the turn, saved ground wherever possible, but weakened in the closing furlongs. BETH BON went into contention with a bold rush on the inside when reaching the homestretch, but was kept in the deeper footing and after a tired bully in the closing furlong. SUN RAP had early speed, but appeared to labor in the footing. EN MASSE was never a factor.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $5,000 added. The Harford Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:20. Off at 4:25½. Winner, H. Bruce's ch. g. (3), by Wise Counsellor—Dry Girl. Trained by F. Garrett. Net value to winner, $5,150; second, $1,000; third, $500; fourth, $250. Time, 0:23 2-5, 0:47 4-5, 1:14 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—JAY JAY (entry), $29.70, $10.00, $8.50; BRIGHT HAVEN, $8.20, $6.00; NAUTCH, $8.60.

JAY JAY, favoring the footing and a strong factor early, took command readily when reaching the homestretch, opened up a winning lead and increased his advantage under mild pressure at the close. BRIGHT HAVEN had good speed while setting the pace and, in his best form, and held on well to outstay NAUTCH. Latter followed close to the leaders all during the running and held on with good courage in the final drive. BROWN TWIG, away slowly, was sent up fast when obtaining racing room on the inside in the last five-sixteenths, but was in the worst footing and he hung badly in the stretch drive. SILENT SHOT closed stoutly after gaining his best stride. DREEL fell back leaving the backstretch and was held safe thereafter. SINGING WOOD was kept on the outside from the start, made a weak bid midway of the turn, then came very wide in the last quarter-mile.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:56. Off at 5:07. Winner, Shandon Farm's br. g. ITALIAN HARRY	(Ford)	111	1	2	3h	5h	7	7	7	23.30

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ROSS, $8.80, $3.30, $2.80; VENETIAN, $2.60, $2.40; KAPENA, $4.00.

ROSS, slower than usual to settle in his stride, improved his position on the outside when bettering his position, came strongly in the last quarter-mile and finished fast to the end. VENETIAN, rated off the early pace, responded gamely to punishment and closed with good energy. KAPENA opened up a long lead when straightened on the backstretch, went along evenly until shaken up, but failed to rally under punishment. KEPI could not threaten when the real test came. PRINCE PETTIE went wide at the first turn, followed closest to the pacemaker, but tired after six furlongs. U DEMON was held safe throughout. ITALIAN HARRY was done early.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:26. Off at 5:29. Winner, Miss E. Biller's b. c. (4), by Gallant Fox—Concession. Trained by P. D. Sanford. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:24 3-5, 0:50, 1:16 3-5, 1:44, 1:51.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—THRUSTER, $6.60, $4.00, $3.00; CLOSE CALL, $7.80, $6.30; MISTER GANDER, $5.90.

THRUSTER sprinted into an easy lead going to the first turn, was given a mild breathing spell leaving the backstretch, was mildly shaken up in the last five-sixteenths of the end. CLOSE CALL, under hard urging from the beginning, rallied nicely to outstay MISTER GANDER, but could not threten the winner. MISTER GANDER raced in improved fashion and continued strongly after racing forwardly all the way. ABBOT'S LAST could not improve his position at any stage. SUN WAY was taken wide at the first turn and raced in dull fashion. MT. HOOD trailed for the entire trip.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 6:01. Off at 6:02½. Winner, G. L. Hamilton's br. g. (5), by St. James—Daughter Zeus. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:24 3-5, 0:51, 1:17 3-5, 1:44 3-5, 1:51 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—JAMES BOY, $20.80, $8.00, $4.40; PENCADER, $4.70, $3.40; AUTOWIN, $4.80.

JAMES BOY, well up from the start, wore down EXAGGERATION on the final turn, drew away easily and had much in reserve at the finish. PENCADER, rated off the early pace, closed stoutly when called upon, but was no match for the winner. AUTOWIN, sluggish in the early racing, gradually improved his position after a half-mile and finished stoutly. EXAGGERATION had good speed to set the early pace, but was racing on the inside in the heavy going and tired. SAMBO JONES could not get up. TWIDGETS stopped badly.

REMARKS .....

NAME OF WINNER .....

NAME OF ENTRANT .....

ADDRESS OF ENTRANT .....

Freddie Miller, the defending champion, rules a favorite with entrants in The Post's Boxing Contest to retain his crown in his 15-round titular contest with Pete Sarron to be held at Griffith Stadium May 11.

Strangely enough, a few more of those thinking the contest to be held for the Police Boys' Club benefit will terminate in a knockout favor the challenger than believe Miller will land the decisive wallop.

Exactly 45½ per cent of all those who have filed entries in The Post contest to date believe Miller will win by a decision, while only 20 per cent think Pete will be declared the winner if the bout goes the full distance.

Nineteen per cent think Sarron will win by a knockout, while only 10 per cent think the champion will put the chill on Sarron. Slightly more than 2 per cent think the bout will end in a draw and a few more than 1 per cent of the entries believe Miller will be the winner on a foul.

Slightly more than 2 per cent of the entries are so improperly filled out that they cannot be considered in the contest, which indicates that much remains to be done in educating the public in the "five-point scoring system" used by the boxing commission and upon which this contest is based.

Tomorrow The Post will run an entry which is considered a model—not insofar as correctly predicting the outcome, but in following the rules of the contest. The Post boxing writer will be very glad to give you any help you may need in interpreting the rules and details of the "five-point system," whether by telephone or from the press box at any local boxing contest.

The Object.

To predict as closely as possible the official outcome of the Freddie Miller-Pete Sarron featherweight championship boxing bout to be held at Griffith Stadium May 11.

The Prizes.

First prize—One ticket, railroad transportation from Washington and hotel bill in New York for the Joe Louis-Max Schmeling bout to be held in June.

Second prize—One ticket to the Louis-Schmeling fight.

Third prize—One ticket to the same contest.

The Rules.

File your entry on the above coupon, or similar blank, showing just how you think the bout will end. If you think it will end in a knockout, mark the coupon thus, showing the round in which you believe it will end, the winner and the time of knockout. In case of a knockout, the entrant calling the winner and round will win. If two or more call the winner and round, the one coming nearest to the time of knockout will win. If two or more are tied on time, the contestant scoring the fight nearest to correctly in the rounds preceding the knockout will win.

If the bout goes the distance, the contestant whose total score most nearly approximates the average score struck by the referee and two judges at the Sarron-Miller bout will be declared the winner. In case of a tie, the contestant who has the greatest number of rounds scored correctly will be declared the winner.

All ties that cannot otherwise be broken will be decided on the time of receipt of your entry. All scoring must be done according to the rules and regulations of the District Boxing Commission. The commission rule on scoring reads as follows:

"Scoring shall be by the '5-point' system. The winner of any round is marked 5. The loser of any round is marked from '0.1' to '4.9.' When a round is even, each contestant is scored '5.'"

Employes of The Post and their relatives are not eligible to enter this contest.

Address all entries to "Boxing Contest Editor," The Washington Post.

Havre de Grace, April 13.—We will have to wait until later to find out what kind of a job the so-called "electric eye" will do in the way of helping the judges decide close finishes . . . the gadget is installed at Havre de Grace and the operators were on the job today . . . they had a good day for it, but there wasn't a race in which there was doubt as to the winner . . . perhaps the closest fit came in the first race, when Double Scotch took third money by a nose . . . from what I can see, and from what I hear, the "eye" probably isn't what it is supposed to be . . . or rather, probably it will not do what it's supposed to do . . . at least, it is a cheap substitute for the real thing used at Santa Anita . . . perhaps it is better than nothing, but apparently it lacks the efficiency of the camera-finish used at Santa Anita for which the company asked a rental of $260 per day . . . I understand that the one here cannot "stop" horses "dead" on the wire . . . and that it does not make a negative but prints the pictures on sensitized paper . . . just what the judges can exhibit in the way of something to convince the bettors as to the right decision we will have to see . . . another thing, the gadget is perched atop the balcony from which the stewards watch the races . . . the way it is aimed, makes me doubt as to its effectiveness should the horses finish close to the pagoda . . . I don't claim to be an expert and perhaps the camera will fool me . . . but I'll have to see it separate a four-nose finish before I'll give my O. K. . . . as usual, Havre de Grace is offering a $500 gold stop watch or the check for the leading jockey at the meeting . . . the Bomar Stable's Grand Slam, pointing for the Derby and the Preakness, almost broke a dozen stop watches yesterday . . . running over a muddy track, the colt, worked in 1.42 2-5 for a mile . . . Sation's trainer put in a scratch for his horse when it was apparent that the track would not be fast for the Harford . . . the valets were wearing new uniforms today . . . Cantersine is my race special for tomorrow.

Brownell and Beach Are Victors in Pro-Amateur Sweepstakes

Four Under Par With 67 Card

Pros Map Plans for 14 Events; Qualify at Indian Spring.

By Dave Herman.

Competing in the first big tournament of the season here, Brownell and his professional partner scored a 67, four under par.

Beach admitted his youthful friend did most of the work, for when the 18 holes were completed the Baltimore pro had only a 76 to show as against Brownell's great 72.

A six handicap player, given strokes only on the fifth, twelfth and sixteenth, Brownell proved his mettle by helping Beach on five holes—the first, where he got a par; the 430-yard fifth, where he bagged a dazzling eagle three; the ninth, where he made his par; the tenth and twelfth, which he birdied.

Given One Stroke.

On the hole Brownell rattled off his eagle, he had a stroke, and thus on the score card he was credited with a deuce. A tremendous tee shot, a zooming four iron, and a 15-foot putt gave him the eagle—only one of the day.

The individual professional prize went to George Diffenbaugh, who shot a brace of 36's for a 72, 1 over par. Leo Walper, Bethesda driving range professional, also out in 36, missed a couple of short ones on the back side, and won the runner-up prize with a 74.

Five teams were tied for second prize in the pro-amateur tournament, each with a 70. They were Alex Taylor, pro, and Spencer Overton, of Rolling Road, who did the back 9 in 33; Diffenbaugh and Tom Belshe, of Indian Spring, and Diffenbaugh and W. R. Stone, of Indian Spring, with 34—36—70; Carroll MacMaster and M. Lewis, of Woodholme, with 35—35—70, and Cliff Spencer and Johnny Miller, of Beaver Dam, also with 35—35—70.

Preceding the tournament the pros held a meeting in the clubhouse and drew up a schedule of 14 events, most ambitious in recent years. Nine of them are pro-amateur sweepstakes.

Of particular importance was the selection of Rolling Road for the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. championship July 13-14-15.

Indian Spring was selected for the National P. G. A. qualifying trials, the date to be announced later.

Md. Netmen Play William and Mary

William and Mary's tennis team provides the season's first opposition for the University of Maryland's netmen at College Park today at 3:30. The match will be played indoors on the boards of Ritchie Coliseum.

A meeting with Western Maryland is scheduled for the same spot tomorrow, but members of the team hope to get outdoors to play the University of Richmond on Friday. A trip to Annapolis to face the Navy will wind up a busy week.

Following is the line-up for the opening match named by Coach Les Bopst: Singles—1, Jim Rintoul; 2, Edmund Beacham; 3, Keaciel Krulevitz; 4, Robert Land; 5, Ted Lehman; 6, Bill Meloy. Doubles—1, Rintoul and Meloy; 2, Beachman and Lehman; 3, Krulevitz and Land.

Johnson to Be on Air.

Walter Johnson and Bill Coyle, WMAL sports announcer, will pitch verbs and adjectives back and forth this afternoon in describing the Nationals' American League opener with the New York Yankees in Griffith Stadium.

Greensboro, N. C., April 13 (AP).—The Mid-South's senior golfers—those 45 years old and over—will play their seventh annual championship tournament over the Sedgefield Country Club course here April 17-19.

This Morning . . . .

With Shirley Povich.

When Mr. Clark Griffith meandered up to the White House yesterday afternoon and presented Mr. Roosevelt with the gold-engraved Annie Oakley that permits the President to crash the opening game today, he slipped over two strikes on the Yankees, who, as you know, are to oppose Mr. Griffith's team today.

POVICH.

Mr. Roosevelt, it seems, is something of a good-luck charm for the Nats. Never have the eyes of the present Chief Executive witnessed the defeat of a Washington team. Even back in the Wilson Administration, when, as Assistant Secretary of Navy, Mr. Roosevelt officiated at the flag-pole ceremonies on opening-game dates, the Nats didn't fail him and vice versa.

It is in the records that the Nats were beaten by the Red Sox on that opening day in 1934 when Mr. Roosevelt tossed out the first ball, but that cannot be held against him. The fact that the Nats were beaten on that particular day only emphasizes the significance of Mr. Roosevelt's presence. That was the day when rain fell in the fifth inning and Mr. Griffith, solicitous of the President's health, persuaded him to leave the premises.

Thus the Nats were left to the cold mercy of the Red Sox without the protective influence of the White House incumbent, and though the Red Sox of that year were no team to be proud of while the Nats were defending their American League pennant, Boston won the game. They came along fast in those last four innings to wallop the Washington pitching and nose the Nats out, but the record of Mr. Roosevelt remains, nevertheless, unsullied.

This is a late date to be bringing it up, but Buddy Myer only lately revealed the real dramatics of his rise to the American League batting championship that September day at Philadelphia last year.

Arch McDonald drew the story from Myer on the radio the other evening and it seems that the Nats' little second baseman was exactly one pitched ball away from the league batting crown when he made that all-important hit at Philadelphia on the last day of the season.

By telephone the Washington bench was keeping in touch with the proceedings at St. Louis where Joe Vosmik, of the Indians, was batting Myer for the batting lead. When it was learned that Vosmik was out of the line-up in an attempt to retain his slim advantage over Myer, the Washington captain, who had already made two hits that afternoon, realized that he needed two more to top Vosmik.

The third hit was not long in forthcoming but there was grave doubt about that fourth hit. Bill Dietrich, the Athletics' pitcher, had worked the count against Myer to three balls and two strikes and then cut loose with a fast one wide of the plate. But it seems that Myer was thinking in there. A walk, he knew, would ruin his chances. He needed that hit. So, taking the big chance, he leaned across the plate and pushed his bat at the ball, fouling it off exactly as he had intended to do.

Thus reprieved and planning to foul 'em off for the rest of the summer if necessary, Myer waited for the next pitch, found it to his liking and rapped a two-base hit to rightfield to beat out Vosmik by a fraction of a point.

In Short—

George Marshall, the eminent Washington laundryman, reports that he is unable to get down a $200 bet on the Nats to win the pennant at the odds of 20 to 1 quoted in New York last week . . . Griffith Stadium officials will cast prayerful looks at the weather until game time today . . . when cold postponed last year's opening for 24 hours, the Washington club was forced to return $11,000 in canceled reservations . . . Joe DiMaggio, whose burned foot is keeping him on the Yankees' bench, will see his first big league game today . . . When he takes the mound against the Yankees, it will be the fourth straight year in which Buck Newsom has pitched the opening game, and it will be the first time in four seasons that Earl Whitehill has not gone to the mound for the Nats in the inaugural . . . Sylvester Breen, Alexandria's No. 1 fan, is always the recipient of the complimentary season pass No. 1 issued by the Washington club . . . which he has never used to crash the gate.

Pretty Girls, Bright Uniforms Part of Reds' Color Scheme

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, April 13.—Larry MacPhail, who brought night baseball to the major leagues last year, has a new and greater attraction awaiting Cincinnati fans for the 1936 season opening tomorrow.

retty Pgirls, in numbers sufficient for a "Follies" chorus, will form a part of the official staff at Crosley Field.

Dressed in blue trousers and blouses and sporting bellhop caps precariously on their curls, they'll move among the fans with the night club song, "Cigars, Cigarettes."

Gatekeepers and ushers will be garbed in blue coats and red trousers. The vendors and score-card salesmen will have uniforms of blue linen with overseas caps to match.

There'll be a uniform with lots of bright color for every employe and Manager Charles Dressen, taking his cue from General Manager MacPhail, has ordered bright red pants for his athletes to wear at the seven night games.

Modernistic concession booths have replaced the unattractive hot dog and cold drinks stands beneath the grandstand. A clubhouse for male employes and a neatly furnished dressing room for the girls have been installed.

And, in keeping with the scenery, a large room has been set aside where, before each game, both men and women employes must undergo inspection for fingernails and neatness of their brightly colored uniforms.

Interior Bowlers To Vie in Sweeps

The Interior Department bowling league which climaxed its season's activities last week with the Secretary's copping the flag after a close race, will hold a sweepstakes tomorrow night at the Convention Hall alleys. All entries will receive a handicap of two-thirds of the difference between their average and top average of 111.

Howard Russell of the Emory Baptist team topped a field of 33 entries to win the Takoma Church League sweepstakes, last night at the Takoma drives, shooting 420. Dutch Sherbahn, of Presbyterian No. 1 finished second with 416 and Jimmy Goode, Baptist Christian, was third with 384.

Hydrographic after leading the Navy Department League all season, relinquished first place to the Navy Yard team last night at the Arcadia alleys. Navigation moved into second place and Hydrographic and Barracks are tied for third.

National Capital Parks clinched the pennant in the Columbia Heights League last night at the Arcadia alleys with two victories over G. P. O. With but one more week to go the battle is on for second place with Investigation holding the edge.

National Stars Swim Here Tomorrow

Washington Aces Pitted Against U. S. School Champions.

Three of the country's fastest schoolboy swimmers will be performing at the Ambassador Pool tomorrow night at 8 o'clock in the last District A. A. U. indoor meet of the season. Irving McCaffrey, Andy Clark and Wally Hoffrichter, of Massanutten Military Academy, two of them national scholastic champions, will be the visiting stars.

Although the District A. A. U. men's and women's lowboard diving championships will form a couple of high lights, the 220-yard freestyle race involving McCaffrey, Clark and Bob Jordan, of Central High School, stands out conspicuously.

McCaffrey, national scholastic 220-yard champion, and Clark, runner-up when Massanutten recently won the national interscholastic championship in Philadelphia, will be only slight favorites to win against the Central speedster. Jordan is the District record-holder for the distance. He will represent the Ambassador Swimming Club. Ernie Boggs, District champion for the distance, also is expected to enter.

Hoffrichter is national 100-yard breast-stroke champion and heavily favored to win that event. Other events will include 50-yard sprint and 100-yard breast stroke for women. In the women's diving, Marie Duval, defending champion, will meet Anne Aronson, of the Ambassador, as her sternest rival.

Washington-Lee High Bows To Tech Nine by 9 to 6 Score

Lashing two Washington-Lee High pitchers for 11 hits, Tech High opened its baseball season yesterday with an impressive 9-to-6 victory over the Little General team on the latter's field in Ballston, Va.

The Techmen proceeded to tuck away a 5-to-1 lead in the second inning and maintained it to the finish. Coach Ed Foxley used three pitchers in an effort to get some kind of a line on his mound strength, having lost both his 1935 starting twirlers, Specks Elgin and Bill Liggett, by graduation.

Myers, the starting Tech heaver, allowed a run in the first inning and gave way to Doonis in the third. West took over the burden in the seventh when Washington-Lee began to rally but quieted the home team effectively, allowing two hits in his three-inning tenure on the mound.

Second Baseman Larrichs, batting hero of the day with a single, double and triple, led the assault in the second with a hit. Don Cost, Washington-Lee pitcher, walked Myers and Snow and Centerfielder Ciomei scored Larrichs and Myers with a single.

Larrichs, connected for two bases and then scored the fifth run of the inning when Abe Fillah slashed out a single.

Tech added three more runs in the third, finally knocking Cost out of the box and continuing the attack on Ray Wheeler. Washington-Lee never came close to tying the count, thereafter.

Jobs Rise But 18,890,000 Are On Relief Rolls

5,413,000 More at Work in December, 1935, Than in March, 1933.

New York, April 13.—The President's statement in his recent relief appropriation message that "at least more than 5,000,000 more people were at work in December, 1935, than in March, 1933," is confirmed by the current estimates of the National Industrial Conference Board, which show an increase of 5,413,000 in the number at work.

The board points out, however, in a study just issued, that this increase in employment has not as yet contributed materially to the solution of the relief problem. The President's estimate of 5,300,000 relief cases would indicate that approximately 18,890,000 persons, or 14.8 per cent of the total population, are receiving relief in some form. To what extent relief requirements are decreasing cannot be accurately determined from the published data of the various governmental agencies, because those data are not on a uniform basis and cannot be compared with earlier figures. In addition, there are no published figures showing the situation with respect to unemployables who have been dropped from Federal relief.

The solution of the unemployment problem, according to the conference board must be sought, not in increased output and employment in manufacturing alone, but chiefly by an increase in activity in other fields.

Manufacturing Gain.

Manufacturing industry in January, 1936, was giving employment to approximately 8,892,000 persons, or 400,000 more than in January, 1935, and 937,000 more than in January, 1934. It has been able to do this because of an increase in the demand for manufactured products, particularly those of the durable goods industries. A further increase in output would undoubtedly provide employment for additional workers, except in those fields where operation is still on a part-time basis. The attainment of that objective, however, is not wholly with the power of industry.

The board also points out that, so far as manufacturing is concerned, any reduction in hours of work, with the purpose of increasing employment, would probably involve at least some reduction in weekly earnings, since a further increase in hourly rates would not be possible in most industries under present conditions. In January, 1936, labor cost per man-hour in manufacturing was 9 per cent above the 1929 level. The seemingly greater security of relief and the payment of relief wages at prevailing rates have tended to offset whatever advantage private employment may offer in the way of higher weekly or monthly earnings. Any reduction in those earnings as a result of shorter hours would lessen the inducement to accept employment in private industry and contribute to increase the number of persons on relief.

Copper Prices Made Uniform At 9½ Cents

Domestic Sales Running at Best Levels Since February.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 13.—A uniform price of 9½ cents a pound was established for domestic copper today, ending the disparity in quotations that has existed since February 15, when an advance from 9¼ cents to 9½ cents by two leading producers was not followed by others.

Establishment of the higher price on an all-round basis, widely predicted in trade circles late last week, found no immediate reaction in the market for foreign copper, due to the holidays abroad, but the price of this class of metal has been creeping steadily upward recently and a new high of 9.213 cents was established last Saturday when a few sales were reported on that basis.

Sales of copper in the domestic market are currently running at the best levels since February, according to trade reports. While the amount purchased late last week will not be determined for several days, exceptionally large sales were known to have been made immediately following reports that the producers and smelters who had been holding 9¼ cents for two months would advance quotations early this week.

The anomalous situation in the price structure had its beginning on February 15, when Phelps Dodge Corporation announced its selling figure would be advanced to 9½ cents on that date. Anaconda Copper Mining Co. quickly followed with a similar quotation, but Kennecott Copper Co., American Smelting & Refining Co. and American Metal Co. made no change in their price and continued to sell metal at 9¼ cents.

Gay Renominated To Head Exchange

New York, April 13 (AP).—Charles R. Gay has been renominated by the nominating committee of the New York Stock Exchange to succeed himself as president at the elections to be held in May, it was announced today.

The renomination is considered equivalent to re-election since no opposition slate is expected to be placed in field by special petition.

Benjamin H. Brinton was renamed by the nominating committee as treasurer of the exchange.

Chicago Easter Trade At Seven-Year Peak

Chicago, April 13 (AP).—Chicago's Easter trade last week reached its highest peak since 1920, the Chicago Association of Commerce said today. Retail outlets reported sales from 10 to 40 per cent above those of a year ago.

Retail buyers displayed a tendency to purchase in the higher brackets, the association reported. Purchases of family clothing were heavy and household and summer garden wares were also in demand.

Coppers and Rails Give Color to Otherwise Dull Trading; Bonds Point Lower.

New York, April 13.—With the exception of two or three groups and a handful of miscellaneous shares, which made up a large percentage of the trading volume, stocks settled back a little in a turnover of 1,500,000 shares, the smallest in two weeks. Bonds also were dull with a tendency to droop. Stocks closed with prices above the poorest, but with the majority of net changes lower. May wheat declined half a cent to 95⅞ cents a bushel.

While stocks were lower in most sections, new developments gave activity to a handful of issues. Auburn weakened on news of an inquiry on the latest financing. A. O. Smith found little support at recent prices and dropped several points. Lively trading took place in the low priced issue. Motherlode Copper, largely on the lifting to 9⅛ cents of the copper price by Kennecott. Calumet & Hecla was another low-priced favorite. Perhaps the market thought that mines of low grade or nearing exhaustion might be worth something if copper went high enough. Anaconda and Kennecott reached new high prices. Coppers were firm from the start, as were the silvers.

Motor shares were steady at the opening and some attempt was made to shove the rails forward, but it required only a slight advance to exhaust the market's enthusiasm. Rails reached a new high level for the group, before the market grew tired. Coppers were the only part of the market to stand up well all day. They were more active in the last hour than at the start.

Case Threshing kept up the pace by swinging up 4 or 5 points more on a few sales. Minneapolis Honeywell gained 5 points on increased dividend on the splitup shares. Douglas was heavy. Steel was draggy and most of the standard industrial stocks lost a little ground. Some excitement was caused by the spurt in Philip Morris for 2 points to a new top.

Taxing and Spending.

Those who had expected a Supreme Court decision on the Guffey coal case were again disappointed, and they had to confine their appraisals of New Deal policies to heavy spending, on the one hand, and to the new corporations profits tax bill, on the other. Both are generally regarded in the financial district as bad, especially on long term, although the short run effect of the outpouring of Government funds and of a tax measure that would tend to increase dividend distribution is somewhat bullish on stock speculation.

Government spending now is looked upon as election money, and probably will be so treated among many recipients, making for wasteful use. The spending of it, along with the soldiers' bonus outpouring to come soon, doubtless will help to keep up surface appearance of improving times; but prudent people will watch for indications of greater activity in the capital goods industries. The new system of taxing corporate thrift and of encouraging individual spendthrifts scarcely will do much to improve matters.

Markets were still too much under the influence of holidays to appreciate the best of the trade news, but such as appeared was favorable. Steel operations, according to the American Iron and Steel Institute, will advance this week to 67.9 per cent of capacity, a climb of more than three points. A year ago the rate was only 44 per cent. Steel is one industry which is now traveling at a faster pace than it was toward the end of last year, encouraging those who had feared that the last quarter's prosperity had borrowed too much from the early months of this year.

Barriers.

The stock market usually is full of checks and balances. Some time ago, when a flow of European money was leaving the gold standard countries, we missed much of it because of the uncertainty of the dollar's position. Now, when the franc and other gold currencies again are shaky, the current of foreign funds is met by a handicap at our ports of the threatened heavy taxation on dividends contained in the new tax bill. These days capital security knows which way to turn, and only one thing is certain: the poor aren't going to get much of it.

Counting the Cost.

A small stockholder in Burns Bros. sends a printed notice of hearing court on claims for fees and expenses of attorneys and accountants. The list of claims is an impressive one, and is a good reminder of the fact that receivership proceedings are mighty expensive. The stockholder who contributes the list asks why, if the company is able to pay the charges demanded, a receivership was necessary. That is a natural enough inquiry for any one to make who looks over a receivership legal fee list, especially when the usual number of protective committees have elbowed in.

First in.

Alton Railroad again was first in with its monthly report. Gross income in March was a little higher than a year ago, but the deficit nevertheless rose a little. The poorer showing was probably due to the weather. Many railroads found an increase in operating expense last month, but loadings were sufficiently higher than those of a year ago to promise a rise in net operating income for the roads as a whole. This week should bring a large number of railroad reports.

Nox.

Trading in New Orleans, Texas & Mexico Railway (Gulf Coast Lines) illustrated how the free and open market provided by the stock exchange in many issues can be a rather weird affair when, as in the case of this road, only a few shares are in public hands. Gulf Coast, with 11,000 shares out, opened at 30 this morning, a jump of 13 points over Saturday's closing price. That frightened the wits out of some one who wished to buy, or greatly excited him lest the market get away. Anyhow a bid and asked quotation of 17@27½ was run on the tape, but offers saw the situation, and as the bid came up they went up too. Succeeding quotations were 18@27½, 19@27½, 21@27½, 22½@27½, 23½@27½, 25@30, 26@30, followed by a sale of shares at 30 and at 34. That price was the highest paid for the shares since 1933. This year's range before today was 17 high and 10¼ low. The road, in receivership, is controlled by the Missouri Pacific.

Gasoline Taxes $30.89 Per Car For Last Year

Effort Should Be Made to Cut Levies, Standard Statistics Says.

New York, April 13.—If the present trend toward steadily higher gasoline taxes persists, automobiles eventually might become a luxury in this country, as they now are abroad, the Standard Statistics Co. warns, in a survey of taxation affecting automobiles.

The survey holds that the time has arrived when a moratorium on higher gasoline and motoring taxes should be declared, and efforts should be directed toward reducing these levies to more reasonable proportions. Otherwise, the two largest industries in the United States, petroleum and automobiles, may languish.

State and Federal taxes on gasoline have increased steadily since 1919 when the total was 16 cents per car per year to a present total of $30.89 per car per year. The Federal tax is 1 cent a gallon, while State taxes range from 2 cents in the District of Columbia, Missouri and Rhode Island, to 7 cents in Florida and Tennessee. Every State has taxed gasoline since 1929 when Massachusetts and New York joined the other 46 States.

The theory behind the taxation of gasoline at first was that the proceeds were to be used for improving highways. There has been a gradually increasing diversion of gasoline taxes to other uses over the past ten years so that now more than 16 per cent is diverted to other than highway uses.

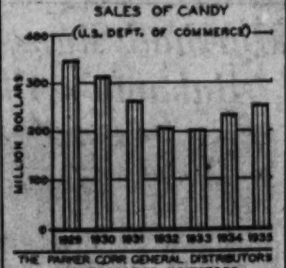
1935 Candy Sales Largest Since 1931



Boston, Mass., April 13.—America's sweet tooth is again asserting itself. For the past two years sales of candy have climbed upward, until 1935 sales were the largest since 1931. October is the big month for candy sales, according to the average of the past seven years, with September, November and December following closely. July is the smallest month, when candy sales are less than half the larger months.

Gasoline on Coast Advanced 2 Cents

San Francisco, April 13 (AP).—Gasoline prices went up 2 cents a gallon in five Western States today. Advances were uniform on all grades. Prices here were 20 cents, 18 cents and 16½ cents a gallon, respectively, on premium, regular and third structure motor fuels.

The new prices put gasoline virtually on the pre-depression level. The Standard Oil Co., in announcing its price lift, said it was "restoring prices to the level which existed before the gasoline market of the Pacific Coast became demoralized."

Veterans Told To Keep Bonus In U. S. Bonds

No Safer Investment, Says President of New York Life.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 13.—Thomas A. Buckner, president of the New York Life Insurance Co., advised veterans not to cash their Federal bonus—not even to buy insurance—but to keep their funds in Government bonds.

Agents of the company have been instructed to make no effort to induce veterans to cash their bonus.

Buckner, in a statement, said that during the World War the New York Life urged veterans to take out war risk insurance and to keep it in force afterward.

"If we now were asked to advise the veterans," said Buckner, "we would also urge them to keep their bonus money in United States Government bonds.

"There is no safer investment. The bonds provide a liquid reserve in case of emergency and they pay 3 per cent interest.

"If these bonds are not cashed before they come due they would then provide the veteran with funds for his later years, which is one of the principal and original purposes of the bonus.

"While many veterans will probably use the proceeds of their bonds to pay off indebtedness, undoubtedly many others will waste the money or lose it in speculative ventures.

"Agents can do a real service by inducing veterans, who can possibly afford to do so, to keep their bonds."

Steel Capacity 67.9%, Highest Since 1930

New York, April 13 (AP).—The American Iron & Steel Institute today estimated steel production during the current week at 67.9 per cent of capacity, the highest since the summer of 1930, and compared with 64.5 in the preceding week and 60.0 a month ago. A year ago production was at the rate of 44.0 per cent of capacity.

The advance in the current week is 3.4 points, or 5.3 per cent over the preceding week.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office

By Morgan Baker.

Social Security Board, with its nucleus of approximately 300 employes, is moving from the new Labor Department Building into the old Labor Building at 1712 G street northwest.

BAKER.

All branches of the board, except the board members, executive director, chief of the Bureau of Business Management and their staffs, are already moved into their G street quarters. These offices are expected to vacate the sixth floor space at Constitution avenue and Fourteenth street by the end of this week, board officials said last night.

Under the social security program the Washington personnel of the board is expected to exceed 5,000 employes in a few years. When asked where these additional employes would be housed, security officials answered:

"That's what we'd like to know!"

Social Security Board's telephone number has been changed from District 6450 to District 2812. The new information office is located in room 103 at 1712 G street northwest.

Karl M. Gregoire (P), Bureau of Plant Industry, and his bride, the former Miss Juliet Lucille Strite, Procurement Division of the Treasury, are preparing to make their home in Chico, Calif. Mr. Gregoire won third prize in the Federal Diary popularity contest in 1933. The wedding took place last Friday night at the Francis Asbury M. E. Church.

Victory Dinner Tonight.

More than 500 persons, including numerous Government officials, are expected to attend the "victory dinner" to be held tonight at the Washington Hotel by the Women's Union, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, No. 105, National Federation of Federal Employes. The dinner will celebrate the passage of the leave bills.

Guest speakers will include Representative Robert Ramspeck, chairman of the House Civil Service Committee, who piloted the bills through Congress; Alvin W. Hall, bureau director, and Luther C. Steward, N. F. F. E. president. Miss Gertrude McNally, N. F. F. E. secretary-treasurer, will be toastmaster.

An extensive program of entertainment, headed by the Bureau orchestra, is announced.

Arranging the affair, under direction of Belle Trouland (P), president of No. 105, are Mignon Miller, Mae C. Bergevin, Gertrude Schellhorn, Minnie D. Stevens, Leo Williams, Olive Greer, Maud Miller, Dorothy Guigon, Violet Turner, Mae Hall, Matilda Lindsay, Mary Willard, Lulu Kendrick, Gertrude Marlow, Nicie Perrell, Blanche Evans, Daisy Phipps, Margaret Garry, Anna Coburn, Lulu Campbell, Mayme Davis, Ethel Fowler, Margaret Carter (C), Catherine Daubner, Belle Buckley Emily Quinn, Anna Lesieur, Thelma Mackey, Marion Skinner, Mae Morgan (C), Daisy Oldfield, Gertrude Ingram, Hazel Gallenne and Anna Davison.

An improvement to navigation is found in the new invention just introduced by Scott B. Macfarlane (F), and Robert E. Jasperson (P), Navy. The device is a gyroscope sextant having means to counteract the effects of sustained accelerations in the position of the artificial horizon which usually forms a part of such instruments.

Five New Units Added.

Four new lodges were added to the American Federation of Government Employes over the Easter week-end, the national office announced last night. No. 298 comes in from Minneapolis and is composed of Veterans' Hospital employes. A new lodge, not yet numbered, is reported located at Jasper, Ala.

Two more lodges in the State, city and county group were received—No. 1080, Milwaukee sewage plant employes, and No. 1081, State employes at Santa Margarita, Calif.

Diary Guest Tickets.

If F, P or C appears after your name call in person on the Federal Diary editor today only between 3:30 and 5 p. m. You will receive tickets to one of the following Loew's theaters: F, Loew's Fox (stage, Everett Marshall and Patricia Bowman and other acts; screen, Freddie Bartholomew and Dolores Costello Barrymore in "Little Lord Fountleroy"); or to P, Loew's Palace (Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee and Slim Summerville in "Captain January"); or to C, Loew's Columbia (third week of Charlie Chaplin in "Modern Times").

Col. Charles I. Stengle, executive assistant, American Federation of Government Employes, is in Wilmington, Del., to attend the funeral of his father, the Rev. Adam Stengle, who died Saturday at the age of 92. Col. Stengle said that his father had been in failing health for several months.

Mortgage Book Explained.

Q. I understand that the Federal Housing Administration has issued some kind of a mortgage book. Can you tell me what the nature of it is?—Henry W. Atkinson (P).

A. The FHA recently issued a publication entitled "Contract Documents for Small House Construction," which outlines and describes "the type, kind and extent of the information that should be contained in a complete set of documents" submitted by mortgage applicants. The booklet goes into details concerning the agreement, general conditions, specifications and working drawings and includes a form for small construction contracts issued by the American Institute of Architects, together with a set of working drawings as an illustration of the type and kind of information to be presented. The publication will serve as an additional protection for private lending institutions and the mutual mortgage insurance fund, as well as for the borrowers themselves. It is being distributed to insuring offices of the FHA and to others upon request.

NED BRANT—A Story of College Athletics

By Bob Zuppke
Famous Football Coach

4-14
FIRST TIME I EVER KNEW RED LIGHT TO GET OUT OF LINE, NED
SORRY I HAD TO CALL FOR HIS SUIT, WITH THAT ERIE GAME COMING UP
DID YOU SAY THIS ABOUT THE ERIE TEAM?
I DON'T KNOW, SHOTGUN—WHAT IS IT?

THE ERIE COACH IS QUOTED AS SAYING YOU CALLED HIS TEAM A BIG JOKE—
I WOULDN'T SAY THAT ABOUT ANY TEAM—YOU KNOW THAT WHY DON'T YOU DENY IT?
BEST TO KEEP STILL—HE'S PROBABLY TRYING TO COKE UP HIS TEAM FOR OUR GAME

APPLE MARY

By Martha Orr

YOUR HONOR, THIS MAN IS NOT TELLING THE TRUTH, WHEN HE SAYS HE SAW ME AT THE CORNER OF TENTH AND MAPLE STREETS, AT ELEVEN O'CLOCK FRIDAY MORNING.
4-14
I HAD MY APPLE CART AT A NEW PLACE THAT MORNING, IN FRONT OF THE UNION STATION.
DID ANYONE SEE YOU THERE?
YES, YOUR HONOR, A YOUNG COUPLE CAME OUT OF THE STATION, AND TOOK SNAPSHOTS OF ME WITH MY CART.
CAN YOU BRING THAT COUPLE HERE?
MARTHA ORR
NO-O-O— THEY WERE STRANGERS TO ME AND I DON'T KNOW WHERE THEY WENT.
THEN IT'S SIMPLY YOUR WORD AGAINST ALL THIS EVIDENCE.

Political Foes, Friends Praise James M. Beck

Eulogies of James M. Beck, champion of the Constitution, who died Sunday, were heard on all sides here yesterday.

Despite his criticism of the New Deal and his record as a Republican Representative from Pennsylvania, he was praised in lavsh terms by many Democrats.

His funeral will be held at 4 p. m. tomorrow in Washington Cathedral. Burial will be private.

A silent House heard Representative Cox (Democrat), Georgia, announce his death in these words:

"On yesterday, the Nation lost one of its most brilliant sons and the Constitution one of its best friends when James M. Beck died."

Beck, a former Solicitor General under President Harding, often called on his outstanding forensic ability to assail the New Deal, principally on grounds of violating the Constitution.

Actve on the national lawyers' committee of the American Liberty League, he recently accused the Roosevelt Administration of constituting "an insidious revolt against our form of government."

A movement was begun in tht House to have the Government print together Beck's speeches on Lincoln, Washington and Shakespeare.

"I detply regret," Cummings said, "to learn of the death of Mr. James M. Beck. He give distinguished public service, both in Congress and as Solicitor General of the United States, and was one of the country's outstanding lawytrs.

"Everyone will be shocked to learn of the death of this distinguished citizen who has been so prominent in public affairs. He was a lawyer of international prominence and a man of great ability."

12th Victim Dies After Air Crash

Pittsburgh, April 13 (AP).—E. W. Day, jr., pilot for Central Airlines, testified today that the Pittsburgh Airport's raido beam worked properly a few minutes before the TWA's Sun Racer crashed on Chestnut Ridge near Uniontown, Pa.

He gave his statements to a Federal investigating committee only a short time before C. G. Challinor, of Cleveland, died, the twelfth victim of the crash in the Allegheny Mountains last Tuesday.

Paul E. Richter, vice president of TWA, testified he had received complaints from two pilots about the beam on the day of the crash.

Cape May, N. J., April 13 (AP).—The Cape May councilmanic board adopted a resolution today to urge President Roosevelt to make his 1936 summer home here. The resolution said five other Presidents—Benjamin Harrison, Ulysses S. Grant, Franklin Pierce, Chester Arthur and James Buchanan—made Cape May their summer capital.

A committee will shortly go to Washington to try to induce the President to come here.

Harlow Brooks, Famed Doctor, Is Dead at 65

Germ He Helped Discover Fatal to Consultant and Diagnostician.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 13.—Dr. Harlow Brooks, 65, who was consulted so often by other physicians he was known as the "doctors' doctor," died today of an infection of the liver, caused by a germ he helped to discover and isolate.

The noted diagnostician and consultant died at Doctors' Hospital, where he had undergone an operation.

The infection which resulted in his death was caused by a germ called "Welch's bacillus" after Dr. Welch, who isolated it several years ago at Bellevue Hospital. Dr. Welch was assisted in this work by Dr. Brooks.

A native of Medo, Mnn., Dr. Brooks spent many of his vacations among Western Indian tribes studying their medical practices, and traveled extensively in South America and Mexico studying archaeology. He had hunted big game in Alaska and Canada and was a member of the Explorers Club.

He attended the University of Oregon, where he received his medical degree and was an assistant demonstrator in anatomy in 1894. In 1895 he became an instructor at Bellevue Hospital, and in 1904 became a professor at New York University. At the time of his death he was visiting physician to Bellevue Hospital.

He served with the Medical Corps in the Spanish-American War, and was chief consultant in medicine to the first army of the A. E. F.

Jane Silvester, Noted Nurse, Dies

Jane Boyd Silvester, who opened the District's nursing home 33 years ago, died yesterday at her residence in the Mendota Apartments, 2220 Twentieth street northwest.

Miss Silvester, who was born in Portsmouth, Va., came to Washington as a young girl 50 years ago. She was educated in local schools and received her nursing training at Johns Hopkins University.

After a few years of hospital nursing she went to Philadelphia to study under Dr. Weir Mitchell, who had acquired a national reputation for his ability to rehabilitate patients.

In 1903 she opened her nursing home here and operated it continuously until her death, with the exception of the war years. During the war she served as an Army nurse at Fort Porter, Buffalo, N. Y., and at Walter Reed Hospital.

She is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Lydia Silvester Draper and Genevieve Silvester, and a nephew, Dr. Richard Lee Silvester all of this city. A brother, Capt. Richard Silvester, president of Maryland State College, now Maryland University, died 20 years ago.

Greece's Premier Dies Of Apoplexy at Athens

Athens, April 13 (AP). — Death forced a change in the leadership of Greece today when Premier Constantine Demerdjis died of apoplexy and Gen. John Metaxis, minister of war, was named to succeed him.

Demerdjis, who had taken little part in politics since 1917 until called to the premiership by King George after the latter's return to the throne last fall, was found dead in bed.

A monarchist, Demerdjis was minister of the navy in 1913-14 and in 1917, but taught civil law in the University of Athens until taking office last year.

Baseball... it's America's outstanding gift to the world of sport

Thrills never to be forgotten... perhaps a home run... or an electrifying no-hit game... perhaps some callow recruit, unheard of in the big time, smashing his way into the hearts of the fans.

Such popularity must be deserved...

Why... because Chesterfields are outstanding for the pleasure they give... outstanding for mildness... outstanding for better taste.

More and more smokers, men and women both, enjoy Chesterfield's pleasing taste and aroma... such popularity must be deserved.
